ERRATA

The portrait placed with the record of Brigadier-General John Thorold Evatt on page 94 is that of Brigadier-General James Reginald Maitland Dalrymple Hay, whose record is on page 99, and the portrait placed with the last-mentioned record is that of Brigadier-General John Thorold Evatt.

The portrait placed with the record of Major John Chaplyn Burnett on page 190 is that of Major John Curteis Burnett, whose record is on page 327, and the portrait placed with the last-mentioned record is that of Major John Chaplyn Burnett.

The portrait placed with the record of Major Harold Brown on page 410 is that of Major Hugh Barrington Brown, whose record is on page 415, and should be transferred to that record.

The portraits given as those of Colonel Rowland James Percy Anderson, on page 140; of Lieut. J. E. Steel, on page 310; of Capt. John Macready, on page 365, and of Major Gerald Burrard, on page 424, are cancelled, as they are not the portraits of these officers. The portrait on page 367 given as that of Major Baptist Johnston Barton is also cancelled, as it is believed not to be a portrait of that officer.

On page 367 in the record of Capt. Harry Kirwan Umfreville it is stated that "he was killed in action 15 June, 1915." This is incorrect: he is still alive. These words were accidentally repeated from the concluding words of the immediately preceding record.

On page 311 in line 3 of the record of Brigadier-General Charles Henry Davies, read "United Service College" for "United Service Club."

THE STATUTES OF THE DISTINGUISHED SERVICE ORDER

VICTORIA R. & I.

VICTORIA, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith, Empress of India, to all to whom these presents shall come, greeting;

Whereas We have taken into Our Royal consideration that the means of adequately rewarding the distinguished services of Officers in Our Naval and Military Services who have been honourably mentioned in despatches are limited; now for the purpose of attaining an end so desirable as that of rewarding individual instances of meritorious or distinguished service in war, We have instituted and created and by these presents, for Us, Our Heirs and Successors, do institute and create a new Naval and Military Order of Distinction—to be designated as hereinafter described—which We are desirous should be highly prized by the Officers of Our Naval and Military Services, and We are graciously pleased to make, ordain, and establish the following rules and ordinances for the government of the same, which shall henceforth be inviolably observed and kept;

Firstly: It is ordained that this Order shall henceforth be styled and designated the "Distinguished Service Order."

Secondly: It is ordained that the Order shall consist of the Sovereign, and of such Members or Companions as We, Our Heirs or Successors, shall appoint.

Thirdly: It is ordained that We, Our Heirs and Successors, Kings and Queens, Regnant of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Emperors and Empresses of India, are and for ever shall be Sovereigns of this Order.

Fourthly: It is ordained that no person shall be eligible for this distinction who doth not actually hold, at the time of his nomination, a Commission in Our Navy, in Our Land Forces, or Marines, or in Our Indian or Colonial Naval or Military Forces, or a Commission in one of the Departments of Our Navy or Army, the holder of which is entitled to Honorary or relative Navy or Army rank, nor shall any person be nominated unless his services shall have been marked by the especial mention of his name, by the Admiral or Senior Naval Officer Commanding a Squadron or detached Naval Force, or by the Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in the Field, in despatches for meritorious or distinguished service in the Field, or before the enemy.

Fifthly: It is ordained that Foreign Officers who have been associated in Naval and Military operations with our Forces shall be eligible to be Honorary Members of this Order.

Sixthly: It is ordained that when We, Our Heirs, and Successors, shall be pleased to appoint any person to be a Member of this Order, such appointment shall be made by Warrant under Our Sign Manual, and counter-signed by one of Our Principal Secretaries of State.

Seventhly: It is ordained that the decoration of the Order shall be and shall be worn as hereinafter set forth.

Eighthly: It is ordained that an Officer shall be appointed to this Order, that is to say, a Secretary and Registrar.

Ninthly: It is ordained that the Secretary and Registrar of this Order shall be appointed by Us, Our Heirs and Successors, and shall have the custody of the archives of the Order. He shall attend to the service of the Order and shall execute such directions as he may receive from Our Principal Secretary of State for War.

Tenthly: It is ordained that this Order shall rank next to and immediately after Our Order of the Indian Empire, and that the Companions thereof shall in all places and assemblies whatsoever have place and precedency next to and immediately after the Companions of Our said Order of the Indian Empire and shall rank among themselves according to the dates of their respective nominations.

Eleventhly: It is ordained that the Badge of the Order, which shall consist of a gold cross, enamelled white, edged gold, having on one side thereof in the centre, within a wreath of laurel enamelled green, the Imperial Crown in gold upon a red enamelled ground, and on the reverse, within a similar wreath and on a similar red ground, Our Imperial and Royal cypher V.R.I., shall be suspended from the left breast by a red riband, edged blue, of one inch in width.

Twelfthly: It is ordained that the names of those upon whom We may be pleased to confer the decoration shall be published in the London Gazette, and a registry thereof kept in the office of Our Secretary of State for War.

Lastly: We reserve to Ourself, Our Heirs, and Successors, full power of annulling, altering, abrogating, augmenting, interpreting or dispensing with these Regulations or any part thereof by a notification under the Sign Manual of the Sovereign of the Order.

Given at Our Court at Balmoral this sixth day of September, in the fiftieth year of Our Reign, and in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six.

By Her Majesty's Command,
W. H. SMITH.

EDWARD R. & I.

EDWARD, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, King, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India, Sovereign of the Distinguished Service Order, to all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Whereas Her late Majesty, Our Beloved Mother Queen Victoria, by a Warrant under Her Royal Sign Manual, countersigned by one of Her Principal Secretaries of State, and bearing date at Her Court at Balmoral the sixth day of September, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six, in the fiftieth year of her reign, did institute and create a new Naval and Military Order of Distinction, to be styled and designated the "Distinguished Service Order";

And whereas, by the said Royal Warrant it was, among other things, ordained that the said Order should rank next to, and immediately after, Our Order of the Indian Empire, and that the Badge of the Order should have on the reverse Her late Majesty's Imperial and Royal Cypher, V.R.I.;

And whereas We have thought fit to signify Our Royal Will and Pleasure that the said Order shall rank next to, and immediately after, Our Royal Victorian Order, and that the Badge shall have on the reverse Our Imperial and Royal Cypher, E.R.I.;

Now, therefore, We do by these presents for Us, Our Heirs and Successors, ordain and appoint:

Firstly, that the Distinguished Service Order shall rank next to, and immediately after, Our Royal Victorian Order, and that the Companions thereof shall, in all places and assemblies whatsoever, have place and precedency next to, and immediately after, the Members of the Fourth Class of Our said Royal Victorian Order, and shall rank among themselves according to the dates of their respective nominations.

Secondly, that the Badge of the Order, which shall consist of a gold cross, enamelled white, edged gold, having on one side thereof in the centre, within a wreath of laurel, enamelled green, the Imperial Crown in gold, upon a red enamelled ground, and on the reverse, within a similar wreath, and on a similar red ground, Our Imperial and Royal Cypher, E.R.I., shall be suspended from the left breast by a red riband, edged blue, of one inch in width.

The Warrant given under Our Sign Manual on the 24th July, 1902, is accordingly hereby cancelled.

Given at Our Court of Saint James's, this second day of July, in the third year of Our Reign, and in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and three.

By His Majesty's Command,
ST. JOHN BRODRICK.

EDWARD R. & I.

EDWARD, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, King, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India, Sovereign of the Distinguished Service Order, to all to whom these presents shall come, greeting;

Whereas Her late Majesty, Our Beloved Mother, Queen Victoria, by a Warrant under Her Royal Sign Manual, countersigned by one of Her Principal Secretaries of State, and bearing date at Her Court at Balmoral the sixth day of September, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six, in the fiftieth year of her reign, did institute and create a new Naval and Military Order of Distinction, to be styled and designated the "Distinguished Service Order";

And whereas, by the said Royal Warrant it was, among other things, ordained that the said Order should rank next to, and immediately after, Our Order of the Indian Empire, and that the Badge of the Order should have on the reverse Her late Majesty's Imperial and Royal Cypher, V.R.I.

And whereas, We have thought fit to signify Our Royal Will and Pleasure that the said Order shall rank next to, and immediately after, Our Royal Victorian Order, and that the Badge shall have on the reverse Our Royal Cypher, E.R. VII.

Now, therefore, We do by these presents for Us, Our Heirs and Successors, ordain and appoint: Firstly, that the Distinguished Service Order shall rank next to, and immediately after, Our Royal Victorian Order, and that the Companions thereof shall, in all places and assemblies whatsoever, have place and precedency next to, and immediately after, the Members of the Fourth Class of Our said Royal Victorian Order, and shall rank among themselves according to the dates of their respective nominations. Secondly, that the Badge of the Order, which shall consist of a gold cross, enamelled white, edged gold, having on one side thereof in the centre, within a wreath of laurel, enamelled green, the Imperial Crown in gold, upon a red enamelled ground, and on the reverse, within a similar wreath, and on a similar red ground, Our Royal Cypher, E.R. VII., shall be suspended from the left breast by a red riband, edged blue, of one inch in width.

The Warrants given under Our Sign Manual on the 24th July, 1902, and 2nd July, 1903, are accordingly hereby cancelled.

Given at Our Court of Saint James's, this fifteenth day of October, in the third year of Our Reign, and in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and three.

By His Majesty's Command,
H. O. ARNOLD-FORSTER.

GEORGE R. & I.

WHEREAS We are desirous of providing for the recognition of further distinguished services in the case of Officers who have been awarded the "Distinguished Service Order."

It is Our will and pleasure and We do hereby ordain that anyone who, after having performed services for which the Distinguished Service Order is awarded, subsequently performs an approved act of gallantry which, if he had not received the Order, would have entitled him to it, shall be awarded a Bar to be attached to the riband by which the Order is suspended, and for every additional such act an additional Bar may be added.

Given at Our Court of St. James's this twenty-third day of August, 1916, in the seventh year of Our Reign.

By His Majesty's Command,
D. LLOYD GEORGE.

The Distinguished Service Order

THE STATUTES

OF THE

DISTINGUISHED SERVICE ORDER

The Order instituted 6th September, 1886.
The Bar instituted 23rd August, 1916.

GEORGE R. I.

GEORGE THE FIFTH, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, King, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India, to all to whom these presents shall come, greeting;

Whereas Her late Majesty Our Beloved Grandmother Queen Victoria by a Warrant dated the 6th day of September, 1886, did institute and create a new Naval and Military Order of Distinction designated the Distinguished Service Order for the purpose of rewarding individual instances of meritorious or distinguished service in war;

And Whereas the said Royal Warrant was subsequently amended by Royal Warrants dated 24th July, 1902, 2nd July, 1903, 15th October, 1903, and 23rd August, 1916;

And Whereas it is Our Royal Will and Pleasure that the Officers of Our recently constituted Air Force shall be eligible for appointment to Our said Distinguished Service Order;

And Whereas We deem it expedient that all amendments to the Statutes of Our said Order heretofore promulgated, or now to be promulgated, shall be incorporated in a Royal Warrant under Our Sign Manual;

Now Therefore We do hereby declare that the rules and ordinances heretofore in force for the government of Our said Order shall be abrogated, cancelled and annulled, and We are graciously pleased to make, ordain and establish the following rules and ordinances in substitution for the same, which shall henceforth be inviolably observed and kept;

Firstly: It is ordained that this Order shall henceforth be styled and designated the "Distinguished Service Order."

Secondly: It is ordained that the Order shall consist of the Sovereign and of such Members or Companions as We, Our Heirs or Successors, shall appoint.

Thirdly: It is ordained that We, Our Heirs and Successors, Kings and Queens, Regnant of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Emperors and Empresses of India, are and for ever shall be Sovereigns of this Order.

Fourthly: It is ordained that no person shall be eligible for this distinction who doth not actually hold, at the time of his nomination, a Commission in Our Navy, in Our Land Forces or Marines, in Our Air Force or in Our Indian or Colonial Naval or Military Forces, or a Commission in one of the Departments of Our Navy, Army or Air Force, the holder of which is entitled to Honorary or relative Navy, Army or Air Force rank, nor shall any person be nominated unless his services shall have been marked by the especial mention of his name, by the Admiral or Senior Naval Officer Commanding a Squadron or detached Naval Force, or by the Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in the Field, in despatches for meritorious or distinguished service in the Field, or before the enemy.

Fifthly: It is ordained that Foreign Officers who have been associated in Naval, Military or Aerial operations with Our Forces shall be eligible to be Honorary Members of this Order.

Sixthly: It is ordained that when We, Our Heirs and Successors, shall be pleased to appoint any person to be a Member of this Order, such appointment shall be made by Warrant under Our Sign Manual, and countersigned by one of Our Principal Secretaries of State.

Seventhly: It is ordained that anyone who, after having performed services for which this Order is awarded, subsequently performs an approved act of gallantry which, if he had not received the Order, would have entitled him to it, shall be awarded a Bar to be attached to the riband by which the Badge is suspended, and for every additional such act an additional Bar may be added.

Eighthly: It is ordained that an Officer shall be appointed to this Order, that is to say, a Secretary and Registrar.

Ninthly: It is ordained that the Secretary and Registrar of this Order shall be appointed by Us, Our Heirs and Successors, and shall have the custody of the archives of the Order. He shall attend to the service of the Order and shall execute such directions as he may receive from our Principal Secretary of State for War.

Tenthly: It is ordained that this Order shall rank next to and immediately after Our Order of the British Empire, and that the Companions thereof shall in all places and assemblies whatsoever have place and precedency next to and immediately after the Commanders of Our said Order of the British Empire and shall rank among themselves according to the date of their respective nominations.

Eleventhly: It is ordained that the Badge of the Order shall consist of a gold cross, enamelled white, edged gold, having on one side thereof in the centre, within a wreath of laurel enamelled green, the Imperial Crown in gold upon a red enamelled ground and on the reverse, within a similar wreath and on a similar red ground, the Royal Cypher, and shall be suspended from the left breast by a red riband, edged blue, of one inch in width.

Twelfthly: It is ordained that the names of those whom We may be pleased to admit to Membership of this Order shall be published in the London Gazette, and a registry thereof kept in the Office of Our Secretary of State for War.

Thirteenthly: In order to make such additional provision as shall effectively preserve pure this honourable distinction, it is ordained that if any person admitted to Membership of this Order shall be convicted of treason, cowardice, felony, or of any infamous crime, or if he be accused of any such offence and doth not after a reasonable time surrender himself to be tried for the same, his name shall be erased, by an Order under the Royal Sign Manual, from the register of Members of the said Order. And it is hereby declared that We, Our Heirs and Successors, shall be the sole judge of the conduct which may require the erasure from the register of the name of the offending person, and that it shall at all times be competent for Us, Our Heirs and Successors, to restore the name if such restoration should be justified by the circumstances of the case.

Lastly: We reserve to Ourselves, Our Heirs and Successors, full power of annulling, altering, abrogating, augmenting, interpreting or dispensing with these Regulations or any part thereof by a notification under the Sign Manual of the Sovereign of the Order.

Given at Our Court at St. James's this first day of April, in the eighth year of Our Reign, and in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and eighteen.

By His Majesty's Command,

MILNER.

The Queen was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]. The Insignia were presented to Her Majesty by the Secretary of State.

London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886.—"War Office, 25 Nov. 1886. The Queen has been further pleased to confer upon the undermentioned Officers the distinction of Companion of the Distinguished Service Order, for Action at Ginnis."

LITHGOW, STEWART AARON, Deputy Surgeon-General, was born in 1833, at Dundee, son of Aaron Lithgow, Esq., and Lydia Stewart, and was educated at Dundee Academy, and Edinburgh University (L.R.C.S. Edin. 1875; M.D., and B.Sc. Edin. 1876); joined the Army Medical Department in 1855. Served through the Indian Mutiny 1857-9, attached to the 75th Regt. (Gordon Highlanders). He was present at the Battle of Budlekeserai (wounded); at the siege, assault and capture of Delhi, the battles of Bulandshahr and Agra, the affairs of Allygur, Akrabad and Kanoj; in the Oudh Campaign, at the actions of Alambagh and Dilkusa; at the Relief of Lucknow and occupation of Alambagh; at the affair of Suilee and the pursuit of Tanta Topi (Mutiny Medal with two clasps). In 1866, on the 3rd of Sept., at Blackheath, London, S.E., he married Elizabeth Charlotte, daughter of the Rev. John Davis (Oxon.), Ordinary of Newgate, and of his wife, M. J. Cooks. Their children are: Stewart James Douglas (died in infancy); Edwin Malcolm (served in the Kent Artillery, Cameron Highlanders, resigned; became M.B., Ch.M., and F.R.C.S., Edinburgh, and served in the European War as Captain, R.A.M.C.); and a daughter, Ethel. Assistant Surgeon S. A. Lithgow became Surgeon in 1867, and Surgeon-Major in 1873. In 1878 he organized a large European Base Hospital at Karachi, during the Kandahar Campaign, being a P.M.O. to the British troops at the base of operations while the Bombay Column advanced to Kandahar in 1880. He was attached respectively to the 17th Lancers, Gordon Highlanders, Carbineers and Cameron Highlanders, and was promoted to Brigade Surgeon in 1880. In 1884 and 1885 he served with the Nile Expeditionary Force as P.M.O., Line of Communication; was specially mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 25 Aug. 1885]; received the Bronze Star, Medal and Clasp, and was created a C.B., having been promoted to Deputy Surgeon-General in 1884. He served in 1885 as P.M.O. during the operations on the Upper Nile, and was again mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 9 Feb. 1886], and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "Stewart Aaron Lithgow, C.B., M.D, Deputy Surgeon-General, Medical Staff. For action at Ginnis." General Lithgow was the first officer to be gazetted after the institution of the Distinguished Service Order.

Stewart Aaron Lithgow.

An extract from Sir Reginald Wingate's "History of the Sudan" (page 272 and following pages) gives the following account of the action at Ginnis:

"The Frontier Force was busily preparing for the impending attack. On the 27th of November the fighting strength was disposed as follows:

	British.	Egyptian.
Kosheh	600	300
Mograkeh	—	266
Sarkamatto and Dal . .	—	200
Akasheh	600	350
Halfa	500	350

Besides small detachments at Tanjur Road, Ambigol Wells, Murat Wells, and Sarras.

"On the 29th of November the first sight of the advancing enemy was obtained by Capt. Hunter, Intelligence Officer to the Force, who telegraphed that the Arab Infantry were visible in large numbers on hill-tops east of Amara. On the following day the armed stern-wheeler Lotus exchanged shots with them. The first attempt on the line of communications took place at Ambigol Wells, a station in the desert on the railway line some twenty miles north of Akasheh. A party of Arabs under the Emir Ez Zein, mounted on camels and horses, with a few men on foot and one gun, had left Amara on the 29th Nov., having previously destroyed the line for about a mile. They attacked on the 2nd Dec. the Ambigol post of thirty men, under Capt. Ferrier, R.E., consisting of detachments of the Berkshire and West Kent Regts. under Lieuts. Fitton and Annesley. They were driven off with some loss. The next day they again attacked the fort, and destroyed a portion of the line to the north. The attack was renewed once more on the 4th. During the intervals of these attacks a redan was constructed to cover the entrance of the redoubt, and several sorties were made under fire to bring in telegraph instruments, ammunition, blankets, etc., while a patrol of the Egyptian Camel Corps, under Lieut. Said Radwan, and Mounted Infantry, under Lieut. de Lisle, succeeded in reaching the fort. This reinforcement, the timely arrival of a train from Halfa with troops, and the advance of a strong force under General Butler, caused the besiegers to withdraw—a great relief to this small garrison, which had held its own for three days with gallantry against overwhelming numbers.

"In the meantime the Lotus was doing good work, and in co-operation with the mounted troops, harassed the enemy, who had by this time occupied in force the villages of Ginnis and Kosheh. In the early morning of the 12th, a party of Arabs, under the Kordofan Emir, Siwari ed Dahab, turned Kosheh Fort and attacked Mograkeh Fort from the north. Here Capt. Besant, in command of a force of some 200 men of the 3rd Battn. of the Egyptian Army, held his own, making repeated attacks on the Arabs, getting within forty yards of their position, and inflicting some loss on them. During this attack the Emir Ez Zein raided the village of Ferkeh, and secured a number of cattle and some money. The enemy drew off during the night. While the line of communication was thus being harassed, the main position of the enemy in front of Kosheh was being steadily reinforced, and the fort of Kosheh was now completely invested on the south side. To understand the situation a slight description of the surrounding country is necessary. From the village of Ginnis to within a short distance of the fort of Kosheh a narrow stretch of cultivation extends along the east bank of the Nile, planted with numerous palm trees. Along this narrow strip and close to the river is a continuous row of strongly built mud houses, for the most part detached. Sometimes they are clustered thickly together, and then perhaps there is a considerable gap, but the whole presents the appearance of a long, straggling village. The village of Kosheh was now strongly held by the enemy, and though the ground to the immediate south of the fort had been cleared to a distance of some 500 yards, this did not prevent the enemy occupying a large black rock which jutted out on the foreshore, from which a very harassing fire was continually kept up on the fort; and had it not been for the excellent construction of this earthwork and the innumerable traverses which it had been found necessary to erect, the loss during the month of investment would have been very much heavier. Close to the rock a palm grove also gave good cover to the enemy's sharp-shooters; casualties daily occurred within the fort, and on the 15th Dec. the fire from the black rock and the palm grove became so unusually harassing that a sortie was made by a party of Cameron Highlanders, under the command of Lieut.-Colonel Everett, who succeeded in surprising and bayoneting fourteen of the enemy, but with the severe loss of Lieut. Cameron mortally wounded, Capt. Hunter severely, and Major Chalmers slightly wounded, one man killed, and three men wounded.

"In the meantime all the posts were being rapidly reinforced. General Grenfell had arrived at Wady Halfa on the 4th Dec., being followed on the 19th Dec. by General Sir F. Stephenson, commanding in Egypt, who assumed supreme command, while General Grenfell became Chief of the Staff. The fire from the enemy's guns was now getting very accurate, and on 20 Dec. a shell passed through an embrasure of Kosheh Fort, dismounting a Gardner gun and severely wounding Major Hassan Radwan, as well as an armourer-sergeant and a private of the Cameron Highlanders. On the 22nd Dec. General Butler, with the mounted infantry, Egyptian Camel Corps, and a troop of the 20th Hussars, reconnoitred from Mograkeh towards Ginnis to ascertain the enemy's strength and position. Before, however, they could reach the high ground, the enemy advanced from Ginnis in force, and the reconnaissance fell back fighting. General Butler's casualties were very slight, but the enemy lost five killed, amongst whom was an important Kordofan Emir named Bedawi el Azrak, who, it was subsequently ascertained, was held in great respect by the Arabs on account of his personal bravery. He alone, considerably in advance of the mounted party he was leading, charged and succeeded in getting close to the mounted infantry before he was shot dead, his horse being captured. All arrangements were now made to inflict a blow on the Arabs, who, elated by the ease with which they had advanced hitherto, boldly pushed their advanced parties north from the village of Ginnis, which was the headquarters of their main body.

"At the same time some 1,000 men with one gun threatened the zariba on the west bank, held by portions of the 9th Sudanese and the 3rd Egyptian battalions. The Arabs appeared entirely ignorant of the impending attack, and indeed their Emirs assured them that the quantities of transport which daily arrived in the Government lines were but preparations for a retreat. On the 29th Dec. Lieut.-General Sir F. Stephenson, Major-General Grenfell, and their staffs marched from Ferkeh to Kosheh, and bivouacked on the east bank below the fort of Kosheh, where the whole of the fighting force was concentrated for the day, viz.:

Lotus Stern-wheeler—Major Lloyd, E.A.

" On the 28th and 29th artillery fire was kept up on the enemy's position, and at 5 a.m. on the morning of the 30th the whole force began to move off, . . . The general plan of attack was briefly as follows :

" The 2nd Brigade to crown the heights above Ginnis, and by artillery and rifle fire to prepare for the attack on the north end of the village of Ginnis by the Cameron Highlanders and the 9th Sudanese.

" The 1st Brigade to sweep round to the south end of the village and attack the enemy's camp.

" The cavalry and mounted troops to protect the left flank of the two brigades and pursue south when the village and camp were taken.

" The detailed movements of the troops were to be as follows: The mounted infantry troops, consisting of the 20th Hussars, Mounted Infantry, and the Egyptian Cavalry and Egyptian Camel Corps, to march in rear of the 1st Infantry Brigade, eventually diverging to the east and scouting on the left flank during the advance.

" The English Camel Corps to support and keep in touch with the 2nd Brigade.

" The attack on Ginnis to be carried out by the 1st Brigade with the Egyptian battery and the Egyptian Camel Corps.

" The 2nd Infantry Brigade, with the English Battery, to attack, in the first instance, the enemy's position between Kosheh Fort and Ginnis.

" The Yorkshire Battn. and the 1st Battn. Egyptian Army to conform to the movements of the screw-gun battery, while six companies of the Cameron Highlanders and two companies of the 9th Battn. Sudanese were to advance along the river bank and capture the village of Kosheh, which would be previously shelled by the screw-gun battery. The armed stern-wheeler Lotus was to steam slowly in advance of the Camerons and fire on the beach and foreshore. The 2nd Brigade had, by daylight, taken up a strong position 1,200 yards from and directly opposite to the village of Kosheh ; at 6.10 a.m. the English battery began to shell the village. A quarter of an hour later the Cameron Highlanders and two batteries of the 9th Sudanese rushed the houses in the most gallant manner. This village was captured at 6.50 a.m., and one brass gun taken. The Lotus co-operated in this movement, and inflicted considerable loss on the retreating Arabs. In the meantime the 1st Brigade, under General Butler, who knew the ground thoroughly, marched over the broken and hilly desert, selecting first a prominent mountain top on the horizon as a line for the advance. When the day broke the brigade had gained a position in the hills about a mile south of the river and a mile and a half south-east of the western end of the village of Ginnis, which was the headquarters of the enemy. Up to this time the advance along the enemy's flank had not been observed, but as the eastern horizon became brighter behind the advance, the Arabs, seeing that they had been surprised, came streaming in long lines and groups from the villages and low ground along the river towards the front. Soon the brigades were lined with their riflemen, who opened and maintained an irregular fire for about forty minutes.

" In the meantime the Egyptian Battery had been brought into action on the right, while the Berkshire, deployed to the left, about 200 yards in advance of the guns ; the Durham Light Infantry prolonging the line farther to the left, while the West Kents were eventually moved to the left flank of the Durham Light Infantry, and the cavalry conformed to the general movement some distance from the left flank of the infantry.

" Unchecked by the strength of the fire, a large body of the enemy's spearmen crept up unobserved through a deep khor (or valley) into a nullah where the dismounted camels of the Egyptian Camel Corps had been placed ; so rapidly did the spearmen advance that the Camel Corps were unable to mount, and were forced to retire slowly before the Arabs, who pressed them heavily, and several hand-to-hand encounters took place. Numbers of the enemy were, however, quickly shot down by the right troops of the Camel Corps and the left company of the West Kents, and the remainder of their column fell back and dispersed amongst the hills. The brigade then swinging round to the left, was directed towards the village of Ginnis ; crest after crest was abandoned before the steady advance, and though several attempts at a stand were made, all were eventually dispersed. In the meantime the Arabs were streaming out of the village in a southerly direction towards Atab, and at 9.15 a.m. Ginnis was occupied, while the mounted troops followed the enemy's line of retreat towards the river. The 2nd Brigade, continuing its advance towards Ginnis, arrived there a quarter of an hour after the 1st Brigade had entered. The pursuit was continued till 10 a.m., and by that time the Arab army was a disorganized mass of fugitives. Their camp was occupied, their treasury, four guns, and twenty standards falling into the hands of the British and Egyptian troops. The Arab force on the west bank made a show of attacking the fort, but when they perceived the retreat along the east bank, they, too, retreated, followed by the garrison of the fort, who destroyed their batteries and trenches.

" General Grenfell, in his Despatch to Sir F. Stephenson, characterizes ' the behaviour of all ranks during the action as steady and the conduct of the whole force of Egyptian troops very creditable.'

" It may not be here out of place to remark that a camaraderie sprang up between the Cameron Highlanders and the 9th Sudanese Battn. which has been perpetuated by the former presenting to the latter a banner inscribed ' Ginnis,' which is always carried on parade alongside the Khedivial colour. On the same day the 1st Brigade advanced to Atab, while the cavalry continued the pursuit to Abri, and on the following day Abri was occupied by General Butler's brigade. From here the Lotus, with the British and Egyptian cavalry under Capt. Smith-Dorrien, continued the pursuit south as far as Absaret, capturing nine large boats, two standards, and a miscellaneous assortment of Arab stores. The total British and Egyptian losses were seven killed, amongst whom was a promising young officer, Lieut. Soltau, and thirty-four wounded. Shortly after the fight it was found that a small party of the enemy still occupied a house in the village of Kosheh, in the capture of which an Egyptian officer was killed. Though frequently summoned, the inmates refused to surrender until guns were brought up, the house shelled, and every man killed. It is estimated that the Arab force engaged on the 30th amounted to some 6,000 men, of whom 500 were killed and 300 wounded.

" Abd el Mejid, the Emir in command, was wounded, while his second, Abd el Mejid el Khalik, was killed, as well as eighteen minor chiefs. The remnant of the scattered forces were collected at Kermeh, where Mohammed el Kheir awaited reinforcements from Berber, which Nejuni could not or would not send him. Abdallah Taashi was said to be furious with Mejid for bringing on an action instead of leisurely besieging the Government troops as he had ordered. The action at Ginnis was a severe blow to the Khalifa."

In 1890 General Lithgow served with the Zhob Field Force as P.M.O., and was again mentioned in Despatches, and in the following year he was promoted to Surgeon-Major-General. He was for some time P.M.O., Southern District, and was appointed Honorary Physician to Queen Victoria. In 1893 Surgeon-Major-General Lithgow retired from the Army, and was appointed Superintendent of the Royal Infirmary, Edinburgh, where he was a highly respected and most popular official. He was much interested in genealogical and antiquarian matters, and also wrote and was consulted by writers as an authority on genealogical subjects. General Lithgow belonged to the family of Lithgows of Drygrange, Roxburghshire, and could trace three royal descents. The property of Drygrange was a grant from the Abbey and Convent of Melrose to John Lithgow, also of Weltown, Linlithgowshire " for services rendered to the Abbey in resisting robbers and depredators." This property was sold during the lifetime of General Lithgow's grandfather, the Rev. John Lithgow, of Etal, Northumberland. A small piece of the same land is included in the property of Fanhope, Roxburghshire, now held by the family. Surgeon-Major-General Lithgow died on 20 Sept. 1899, at his residence, Fanhope, Melrose.

ST. LEGER, HENRY HUNGERFORD, Lieut.-Colonel, was born 26 April, 1833, and entered the Army, 18 Aug. 1854. He served in the Indian Mutiny campaign in 1858, being present with the Flying Column at the engagement on the banks of the Jumna, and with the Camel Corps at the Battle of Gowlowlee, and at the capture of Calpee, and received the Medal and clasp. In 1860 he was promoted to Captain, and in the same year he married Florence Stuart (who died in 1892), daughter of the late John Moore, Esq. Capt. St. Leger became Major in 1873, and from 1875 to 1880 he was an Adjutant of Auxiliary Forces. In Feb. 1881, he joined the Cameron Highlanders as Major, from the 71st Highlanders, and he became Lieutenant-Colonel, Cameron Highlanders, 1 July, 1881. In the Egyptian Campaign of 1882 he was present at the Battle of Tel-el-Kebir (Medal with clasp, and Khedive's Bronze Star). He served throughout the Nile Expedition of 1884–5 (clasp). On 18 Aug. 1884, he became Lieutenant-Colonel Commanding. " On the 31st March, 1885, to the great regret of all ranks, Colonel J. M. Leith, C.B., left the regiment to take up the appointment of Assistant Adjutant-General to the Suakim Field Force, and he was succeeded in the Command by Lieut.-Colonel H. H. St. Leger, who became Colonel in 1885," and commanded the advanced posts and the Cameron Highlanders in the operations in the Eastern Sudan in 1885–86. Colonel St. Leger was present, as Commandant, at the defence of Fort Kosheh, during its investment, and at the action of Ginniss. " The Records of the Cameron Highlanders " gives the following account of the preparations for the Defence of Kosheh : " On the 19th of November, 1885, the headquarters and right half battalion, under Colonel St. Leger, moved to Akasheh, being joined at Sarras by D Company. They bivouacked for the night at Akasheh, and proceeded the following day by whale-boats to the Dal Cataract, and from thence to Firket, eight miles further on. On the 21st, in pursuance of orders, the headquarters and right half battalion moved from Firket to Mograkeh, an old Arab Fort in total ruins, which Colonel St. Leger had been directed to place in a state of defence with a view to keeping open the communications between Akasheh and Kosheh. Work was at once commenced, the old towers were loop-holed, the walls cut down and rendered defensible, and a zeriba was made around the most exposed sides. In the meantime Lieut.-Colonel Everett and the left half battalion were working hard at the defences of Kosheh, where the trees were felled, the ground cleared, and a large zeriba constructed on the west bank of the Nile. . . . On the 29th of Dec. 1885, Lieut.-General Sir Frederick Stephenson attacked and dispersed the Dervishes at Ginniss. . . . It was known that the Soudanese Army was approaching rapidly, and might be expected before Kosheh in a few days. . . . The garrison of Kosheh now consisted of one troop of the 20th Hussars, one troop of Mounted Infantry, a few British and Egyptian artillerymen, the Cameron Highlanders, and 100 men of the 9th Soudan Battn., under Major Archibald Hunter; 150 blacks from the same battalion, under Major Borrow, occupied the zeriba on the west bank. Mograkeh was held by the 3rd Battn. of the Egyptian Army, under Major Besant, and some of the Egyptian Camel Corps. The armed steamers Lotus and Shaban patrolled the river." For his services in this campaign Colonel St. Leger was mentioned in Despatches by Sir Frederick Stephenson [London Gazette, 9 Feb. 1886], and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "For action at Ginniss, Henry Hungerford St. Leger, Lieut.-Colonel, Cameron Highlanders." He also received the Medal with clasp, and the Khedive's Bronze Star. Colonel St. Leger retired on 2 April, 1883.

COKER, EDMUND ROGERS, Colonel, was born 4 Jan. 1844, at St. Croix, West Indies, son of the late William Worthington Coker, Ash-in-Stourpaine, Dorset, and of Matilda Augusta, daughter of W. Dewhurst, of Santa Cruz, West Indies. He was educated at a private school and at Addiscombe, and entered the Madras Army in 1861; was transferred to the 106th Light Infantry in 1863; appointed Adjutant in 1874; promoted Major and Lieutenant-Colonel in 1881, and Colonel in 1885. He served with the Frontier Field Force in the Sudan in 1885 and 1886, in command of the 2nd Battn. Durham Light Infantry; was mentioned in Despatches, received the Medal and the Khedive's Bronze Star, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "For services at the action at Ginniss, 30 Dec. 1885, Edmund Rogers Coker, Lieut.-Colonel and Colonel, Durham Light Infantry." Soon after the battle of Ginniss "most of the troops" (says Colonel A. Haggard, in "Under Crescent and Star," page 391) "were in a few days' time marched back northwards to Akasheh, and gradually to Wady Halfa, only a very small force being left at Ginniss to form the extreme frontier guard. This force consisted of the 2nd Battn. of the Durham Light Infantry, under Lieut.-Colonel Coker, which regiment was encamped near the old fort at Kosheh; of my battalion of Egyptians, 300 men of whom took possession of Fort Mograkeh, the remainder being either with Hartayne at Akasheh, or on detachment under Frith at Sarkametto; of the Black Battalion, now under Gibb, and a few details of British Mounted Infantry, under a smart young officer named Tudway." He married, in 1889, Agnes Gertrude, daughter of the late Charles Meade-King, of Taunton. Colonel Coker's favourite recreations were shooting and riding. He died on 11 March, 1914.

MURRAY, KENELM DIGBY, Lieut.-Colonel, was born at Dover 6 Feb. 1879, third son of Lieut.-Colonel Sir J. Digby Murray, 10th Bart., of Black Barony, Peeblesshire, N.B., and of Frances, his wife, daughter of the late Peter Pattern Bold. He was educated at Trinity College, Glenalmond, and at private schools, and joined the 9th Regt. in 1860, exchanging into the 89th in 1869. He married in 1870, Caroline, daughter of the late Colonel George Thompson, C.B., and their children were: Archibald Digby, born in 1878; Kenelm Digby Bold, born in 1879; Frances Anna, and Constance Digby. He passed through the Staff College in 1876, and was D.A.A. and Q.M.G., 2nd Division, being present at the Battle of Tel-el-Kebir. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 2 Nov. 1882], received the Medal and clasp and the Bronze Star, the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel, and the 4th Class Osmanieh. He was D.A.A. and Q.M.G. at Alexandria, 1882–85, and A.A.G., Frontier Force, Egypt, from 1885 to 1886. For his services in the Sudan Campaign, and especially at the action at Ginniss, he was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 9 Feb. 1886], and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "Kenelm Digby Murray, Lieut.-Colonel, Royal Irish Fusiliers. For the Action at Ginniss." In 1888 Lieut.-Colonel Murray succeeded to the command of the 1st Battn. Princess Victoria's Regt., the Royal Irish Fusiliers, and he became Colonel 9 Jan. 1889. From 1889 to 1894 he was A.A.G., Headquarters, India. He was placed on half-pay, late Staff, 6 Jan. 1894. Colonel Murray's favourite recreations were shooting, riding, golf, etc. Colonel Murray died 19 Feb. 1915.

TWEEDIE, JOHN LANNOY, Colonel, was born 6 May, 1842, fifth son of the late Capt. Michael Tweedie, R.A., of Quarter, Peeblesshire, N.B., J.P. for Kent, and of his wife, Frances, daughter of the late Richard Walter Forbes, of Watertown, County Aberdeen, N.B. Educated privately, he passed for a direct commission, and joined the 97th (Earl of Ulster's) Regt. 3 July, 1860. He became Captain in 1869 and Major in 1879. In 1881 Major Tweedie served in South Africa with the Natal Field Force, with the Royal West Kent Regt. He became Lieutenant-Colonel in 1884, and commanded the 1st Battn. (Queen's Own) Royal West Kent Regt. from 29 Dec. 1884, to 29 Dec. 1889, taking part in the Sudan Expedition in 1884 and 1885, and receiving the Nile Medal with clasp, and the Khedive's Bronze Star. In 1885 and 1886 he served with the Sudan Field Force, was present at the Action of Ginniss, was mentioned in Despatches and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "John Lannoy Tweedie, Lieut.-Colonel, Royal West Kent Regt. For Action at Ginniss, in command of the 1st Battn. Royal West Kent Regt." He became Colonel 11 June, 1888, and from that date until 1 April, 1897, when he went on half-pay, Colonel Tweedie commanded the 39th Regimental District. He retired on 6 May, 1899. He married on 15 Sept. 1891, Emma Constance, third daughter of William Craig Murray, Esq., of Avonmore, Ballybrack, County Dublin, and they have two daughters: Kathleen Hay Lannoy and Olive Murray Lannoy.

BENNETT, WILLIAM, Colonel, was born 15 Nov. 1835, at Athlone, Ireland, eldest son of Capt. Thomas Bennett, 14th Hussars, and of Winifred Bennett, daughter of the late N. Keatinge. He was educated at private schools, and joined the 1st Battn. 19th Foot in India, as Ensign, in 1858, the battalion in which he afterwards served for 32 years. Shortly afterwards he passed in Hindustani, and was appointed Regimental Interpreter. In 1862 he obtained a first-class certificate at the School of Musketry, Hythe, and held the appointment of Instructor of Musketry to the 3rd Depôt Battn. at Chatham, and afterwards to his regiment. He took part in the Hazara Campaign, North-West Frontier of India, including the expedition against the Black Mountain Tribes, 1868 (Medal with clasp). He married, in 1869, Belinda, daughter of the late William Rosher, of Woodfield, Northfleet, Kent. He was promoted Captain in 1871, and in July, 1877, returned to Hythe as Captain Instructor at the school, and was appointed D.A.A.G. for Musketry at Aldershot 1 March, 1878, remaining in that position until, on getting his majority in 1881, he rejoined the Yorkshire Regt. at Halifax, Nova Scotia. When on the Staff at Aldershot, he founded in 1878 the Annual Aldershot Rifle Meeting. Colonel Bennett always took a keen interest in shooting, being himself one of the best shots in the Army, and the winner of many important trophies in the matches of the Northern Indian Rifle Association, as well as a successful big game shot in Kashmir. An instance of his fine marksmanship in target-shooting was witnessed one day on the rifle range when, as Regimental Musketry Instructor, he was endeavouring to train a batch of third-class shots to make the best of the very inferior Lee-Enfield rifles which were at that time issued to the battalions in India. One of the men, after several tries, failed altogether to get a single shot on the target. "How is it, Private Atkins, that you are shooting so badly?" inquired the instructor. "Well, sir," said the man, "I think this 'ere rifle is a very bad one; I can't make nothing of it." Capt. Bennett took the rifle from the man with his right hand only, put it to his shoulder, and without touching it at all with his other hand, aimed at the target, and immediately made a bull's-eye. "I do not think there is much fault to be found with that rifle," he remarked to the greatly surprised Mr. Atkins. After much "testing," those rifles were ultimately changed for a superior make, with the result that the shooting of the regiment was so good the next year (1871) as to draw forth the following favourable remarks from the Commander-in-Chief in India: "The shooting is excellent, and evinces a degree of care in the performance of the annual course of musketry which is very creditable to the battalion. The exertions of the Officer Instructors, Capt. Bennett and Lieut. Emerson, have been reported to His Excellency as being worthy of special commendation, an expression of which Lord Napier of Magdala accordingly desires may be communicated to those officers." As Major he served in the Nile Expedition of 1884–5 (Medal and clasp; Bronze Star); was promoted Lieutenant-Colonel in 1885; served in the Sudan, 1885–6. He commanded the 1st Battn. Yorkshire Regt. in the action of Ginniss; was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "For action at Ginniss, William Bennett, Colonel, Yorkshire Regt." Mentioned in Despatches. He retired as full Colonel in 1890, After 22 years on the retired list, during which time, being very fond of travelling, Colonel Bennett visited the Holy Land and many parts of Europe and North Africa, he died of pneumonia and heart failure on 2 Aug. 1912, at Whitby, Yorkshire, aged 76.

SKINNER, JAMES TIERNAY, Lieut.-Colonel, was born in Bengal, 26 July, 1845, son of R. M. Skinner, Esq., of the Indian Civil Service. He was educated at Wimbledon (Brackenbury and Wynne), and at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and entered the Royal Irish Regt. in 1864, joining the C. and T. Staff in 1866, and being appointed D.A.Q.M.G. in Dec. In 1872 he married Jessie Rose, daughter of George Walpole Leake, Esq., of Perth, Western Australia. He became Assistant Commissary-General in April, 1880. In 1884–85 he served in the Sudan Expedition (Medal and clasp and Despatches). In 1885 he was promoted Honorary Lieutenant-Colonel, and in that year and 1886 he served in the Nile Expedition, was mentioned in Despatches and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "James Tiernay Skinner, Assistant Commissary-General and Honorary Lieut.-Colonel, Commissariat and Transport Staff. For the Action at Ginniss." Colonel Andrew Haggard, on page 390 of "Under Crescent and Star," says that the transport service was "admirably organized by Colonel Skinner, of the Army Service Corps." In 1888 he was a Colonel in the Army Service Corps; he was A.A.G at Aldershot, 1889–93, and was afterwards A.Q.M.G. at Headquarters. In 1894 he was created a C.B. Colonel Skinner died 11 Nov. 1902.

EVERETT, EDWARD, Lieut.-Colonel, was born 4 June, 1837. He was educated at Marlborough, and joined the 79th Regt. as Ensign 1 March, 1855; served in the Crimea after the fall of Sebastopol; served in the Indian Mutiny Campaign, 1858–59, including the Siege and Capture of Lucknow; attack on the Fort of Rooyah, actions at Allygunge, Bareilly and Shahjehanpore; capture of Forts Bammiar and Mahomdie; passage of the Gagra at Fyzabad; capture of Rampore Kussia, and subsequent operations in Oudh, across the Gagra and Raptee Rivers (Despatches [London Gazette, 25 May, 1858], Medal, clasp). He served throughout the Nile Expedition of 1884–85 (mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 25 Aug. 1885], Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel, Medal and clasp, and Khedive's Star); he served throughout the operations of the Indian Frontier Field Force, 1885–86, being present at Kosheh during the investment; commanded the reconnaissance of the 16th Dec., and the night attack, carried out by the Cameron Highlanders and the 9th Soudanese, on the village of Kosheh at the engagement of Ginniss. Colonel Andrew Haggard, in "Under Crescent and Star" (page 372), says that "the force advancing on the village of Ginniss consisted of two very strong companies of the Egyptian Black Battn., who were on the right of six companies of the Cameron Highlanders under that gallant soldier Lieut.-Colonel Everett, then the second in command of this fine regiment. Colonel Everett was especially selected to command the regiment in action that day." On the 16th Dec. 1885, F and H Companies, under Lieut.-Colonel Everett were sent out at 6 a.m. to make a demonstration against the enemy occupying the village of Absari. As the companies approached the Dervishes opened a heavy fire from the loop-holed houses, which was vigorously replied to (page 263, "Records of the Cameron Highlanders"). Having advanced close to the village, the companies retired again under cover of the guns in the fort. In this reconnaissance the Cameron Highlanders had Major Chalmers (severely), and Lieut. W. G. Cameron (mortally), and four rank and file wounded. Major Archibald Hunter, 9th Battn. Egyptian Army, was also very dangerously wounded. On the 29th of Dec. 1885, Lieut.-General Sir Frederick Stephenson arrived at Mograkeh with 4,000 Egyptian and British troops, and the investment of Kosheh, which had lasted 31 days, terminated. The following morning the Anglo-Egyptian force, under Lieut.-General Stephenson, attacked and dispersed the Dervishes at Ginniss. The Cameron Highlanders and the 9th Soudan Battn. of the Egyptian Army, under the command of Lieut.-Colonel Everett, took the village of Absari at the point of the bayonet, and afterwards occupied and burnt the village of Ginniss. All the enemy's standards, five guns and his ammunition and nuggars fell into the hands of the British and Egyptians. In this engagement the Cameron Highlanders had eight rank and file wounded. The regiment bivouacked for the night at Ginniss, and on the morning of the 31st D and E companies, under Captains Hacket-Thompson and Urquhart, were sent to dislodge some Dervishes who were still holding out in some houses near Kosheh; this they accomplished without further loss, returning the same evening to Ginniss. Colonel St. Leger, Lieut.-Colonel Everett and Major Money were mentioned in Sir Frederick Stephenson's Despatches [London Gazette, 9 Feb. 1886], and received the D.S.O. (page 267, "Records of the Cameron Highlanders"). Lieut.-Colonel Everett was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "For action at Ginniss. Edward Everett, Lieut.-Colonel, Cameron Highlanders." Before the departure of the regiment His Highness the Khedive conferred the 3rd class of the Order of the Medjidie upon Lieut.-Colonel Everett, D.S.O., in recognition of his services at the engagement of Ginniss. On the 16th July, 1887, Colonel St. Leger retired from the command of the regiment, being succeeded by Lieut.-Colonel Everett, D.S.O. He was promoted Colonel on 15 June, 1889. "On the 20th of May Colonel E. Everett, D.S.O., who had greatly endeared himself to all ranks, retired from command of the regiment." He was created a C.B. in 1897.

The late G. W. Steevens wrote in "With Kitchener to Khartum" (pages 5–7): "Little by little, Egypt—British Egypt now—gained strength and new resolution. Four battles mark the stages from weakness and abandonment to confidence and the resolution to reconquer. At Ginnis, on the last day but one of 1885, came the first Anglo-Egyptian strategical victory. The Mahdists had been tactically beaten before—well beaten; but the result had always been that we fell back and they came on. After Ginnis, fought by the British Army of occupation, aided by a small number of the new Egyptian Army, we stood firm, and the Dervishes were washed back. There were men of the Cameron Highlanders on the Atbara who had fought in that battle; it was not perhaps a very great one, but it was the first time the enemy had been brought to a standstill. He retired behind the Third Cataract. Then followed three years of raid and counter-raid. Chermside cut up their advance-guard at Sarras; they captured the fort of Khor-Musa, the 13th Sudanese drove them out within twelve hours. On the Suakin side the present Sirdar made head against Osman Digna with what irregulars and friendlies he could get together. Then in 1888 Osman waxed insolent and threw up trenches against Suakin. It became a regular siege, and Dervish shells fell into the town. But on 20 Dec. Sir Francis Grenfell, the Sirdar, came down and attacked the trenches at the Battle of Gemaizeh, and Osman fell back shattered: never again did he come so near his soul's ambition. Meanwhile, Wad-en-Nejumi—the great Emir, the conqueror of Hicks and the captor of Khartum—had hung on the southern frontier, gathering strength for his attack on Egypt. He came in 1889, skirting Halfa in the Western desert, striking for a point in Egypt proper above Assuan. His Emirs got out of hand and tried to get up the Nile; in a hard day's tussle at Argin, Colonel Wodehouse and the Halfa garrison threw him back into the desert again. Nejumi pushed on southward, certain of death, certain of Paradise. At Toski Grenfell brought him to battle with the flower of the Egyptian Army. At the end of the day Nejumi was dead, and his army was beginning to die of thirst in the desert. Egypt has never been attacked since. Finally, in 1891, Colonel Holled-Smith marched against Osman Digna's base outside Suakin, the oasis of Tokat. The Dervishes sprang upon him at Afafit, but the days of surprise and panic were over. They were rolled back and shattered to pieces; their base was occupied, and Suakin as well as Halfa had peace."

SCOTT, DOUGLAS ALEXANDER, Capt., Brevet Lieut.-Colonel, was born 14 Dec. 1848, at Boulogne, France; son of the late John Scott, M.D. (Edinburgh, London and Paris), and Alicia Lucy Murray, granddaughter of the late Admiral Sir George Murray, K.C.B. He was educated at Milton Abbas Grammar School, Blandford, and at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and was gazetted to the Royal Engineers as Lieutenant on 8 Jan. 1870. After a period of home training he was ordered to India, when he entered the Railway Department, Public Works Department, and was selected to have charge of the Royal Train on Government Railways on the occasion of the visit of the Prince of Wales (subsequently King Edward VII.) to India in the cold weather of 1875, for which Lieut. Scott received the thanks of the Government of India. He was later appointed Consulting Engineer to the Government of India, for Guaranteed Railways, which post he retained until 1877. He was then appointed an Assistant Director of the State Railways, and in 1872 joined the Khyber Column in the Afghan War of 1878–79 (Medal). He returned to England in 1880; was promoted Captain 8 Jan. 1882; was ordered to join the Egyptian Expedition in 1882, and was employed on the Railway Works; was mentioned in Despatches 2 Nov. 1882; received the Brevet of Major 18 Nov. 1882, the British Medal and the Khedive's Star. For some months previous to proceeding to Egypt he was employed on the Ordnance Survey of England. Towards the end of 1884, when the Nile Expedition was decided upon, Major Scott was ordered to Egypt. Shortly after his arrival he was appointed a D.A.A.G. and D.Q.M.G., and as Director of Military Railways he was responsible for laying the desert line of railway from Sarras to Ginniss, when the action against the Arabs was subsequently fought. In these operations he was mentioned in Despatches, and received the brevet rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. Later on he was employed with the Frontier Field Force, being again mentioned in Despatches 25 Aug. 1885, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "For action at Ginniss, Douglas Alexander Scott, Capt. and Brevet Lieut.-Colonel, Royal Engineers." In July, 1888, he got his regimental majority and was a full Colonel in 1889. In June, 1894, he was appointed A.A.G., Royal Engineers at Headquarters, which appointment he held till June, 1899. On leaving the War Office he was appointed Colonel on the Staff, C.R.E., Southern District, and commanded the Southern District during the absence of Lieut.-General Sir Baker Russell, G.C.B., at the time of the death of Her Majesty Queen Victoria. For his services during this period he was appointed C.V.O. in March, 1901. In Sept. 1902, he was promoted a Major-General, and made C.R.E., 2nd Army Corps, subsequently being made Chief Engineer, Southern Command. In Dec. 1906, he received the appointment of Commander, Thames and Medway Defences, and retired from the Service in 1909. He was made a C.B. in 1897, on the occasion of Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee. He is an F.G.S., and Hon. Colonel, Engineer and Railway Staff Corps. He married in 1894, Mary, daughter of the late Capt. Cardew, of the Highland Light Infantry, and of the late Hon. Mrs. Cardew, daughter of the late 1st Baron Westbury, for some time Lord Chancellor of England. He had one son and two daughters. His favourite recreations were cycling, music and golf. Major-General Scott died on 29 June, 1918.

Douglas Alexander Scott.

BARROW, CHARLES THESIGER, Brevet Lieut.-Colonel, joined the Scottish Rifles as Lieutenant 3 July, 1872, and became Captain 12 Feb. 1881, serving with the first Egyptian Expedition in 1882 as Commandant of the Auxiliary Transport (Medal and Khedive's Star). He became Major 23 May, 1883, and served with the Nile Expedition in 1884-85, with the Mounted Infantry, and was present at the action of Abu Klea (mentioned in Despatches, Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 15 June, 1885, two clasps). He served with the Sudan Frontier Field Force in 1885–86, in command of Mounted Infantry, and was present in the engagement at Ginniss; was mentioned in Despatches and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "Frederick Thesiger Barrow, Major and Brevet Lieut.-Colonel, Scottish Rifles. For the action at Ginniss." He also served in the operations at Suakin in Dec. 1888, including the engagement at Gemaizah (Despatches, Brevet of Colonel, clasp). He served with the Mounted Infantry from 1884 continuously till the close of the Egyptian operations, and was present at most of the engagements which occurred. He became Colonel 28 Dec. 1888, and was second in command of the Cameronians at the time of his death, which occurred at Brindisi on 28 April, 1892. He was buried at Saltwood Castle, Sandling.

Morgan Samuel Crofton.

College, and joined the Army in 1868, as Ensign, South Staffordshire Regt. From 1879 to 1880 he served on the Staff in South Africa, and in the Zulu War. In June, 1879, he was on special service, and as Staff Officer and D.A.Q.M.G. from Oct. 1879, to April, 1880 (Medal with clasp). From 1881 he was A.D.C. to the General Commanding, Scotland; and in 1884–86 he served in the Nile Expedition; was mentioned in Despatches; received the Medal with clasp and Bronze Star, and was given the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel. He was also created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "Morgan Samuel Crofton, Major and Brevet Lieut.-Colonel, South Staffordshire Regt. For Action of Ginniss." From 1894 to 1899 he was Chief Staff Officer in South Africa, and he was created a C.B. in 1899; was promoted to Colonel and was Chief Staff Officer, Eastern District, Commanding the Eastern Counties Militia Brigade. In 1894 Colonel Crofton married Ruperta, daughter of the late Colonel Charles Edward Gostling Murray, and widow of W. H. Willats, of Denton Court, Kent. Colonel Crofton died on 9 Jan. 1916.

TEMPLE, CHARLES PILCHER, Lieut.-Colonel, was born 13 March, 1843, son of the late James Temple, Esq., of St. Margaret's, near Dover. He was educated at a private school, and entered the 49th Regt. in 1862, being promoted to Captain in 1874. In 1875 Capt. Temple married Rosabell Charlotte Campbell (who died in 1893), only daughter of Admiral Charles Wright Bonham. In 1881 he was promoted Major, and from 1885 to 1886, served with the Egyptian Frontier Field Force, being present at the action of Ginniss, in command of the 1st Battn. Royal Berkshire Regt. He was mentioned in Despatches; received the Medal and the Khedive's Bronze Star, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "Charles Pilcher Temple, Lieut.-Colonel, Royal Berkshire Regt. For Action at Ginniss." He had become Lieutenant-Colonel in July 1886, and from 1887 to 1891 commanded the 1st Battn. Princess Charlotte of Wales's (Royal Berkshire) Regt. From 1892 to 1895 he commanded Regimental District No. 29, and he was Assistant Adjutant-General, Cork District, from 1895 to 1902, in which latter year he retired, having been promoted to Colonel in 1890.

Charles Pilcher Temple.

HEPPER, ALBERT JAMES, Major, was born at Gibraltar 24 Oct. 1839, 2nd son of the late Richard Lawless Hepper, of Gibraltar. He was educated at a private school; at King's College, London, and the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and entered the Royal Engineers in 1859. In 1867 he married Sophia Henrietta (died in 1907), youngest daughter of the late Richard Lees, of Oaken, Staffs, and they had five sons and two daughters: Sir H. A. Lawless Hepper, late Major R.E. (retired), born 30 Jan. 1870, Agent G.I.P. Railway, Bombay; Lieut.-Colonel L. L. Hepper, D.S.O., R.A., born 4 April, 1871; Florence Sophie (married H. Cradock-Watson, M.A.); Lieut.-Colonel E. C. Hepper, I.M.S., born 6 Oct. 1876; Major A. W. Hepper, R.E., born 5 Dec. 1878; Margaret; Captain J. E. Hepper, R.A.M.C., born 19 March, 1889. He became Captain in 1872, and Major in 1881; was Adjutant of Auxiliary Forces, 1877–84; commanded the Royal Engineers on lines of communication in Egypt 1884–85, with the Nile Expedition. He was in command of the Royal Engineers with the Nile Frontier Field Force, 1885–86, being present at the action of Ginniss (Despatches, 3rd Class Medjidie, and the Khedive's Bronze Star, Egyptian Medal, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order) [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "For action at Ginniss. Albert James Hepper, Major, Royal Engineers." In 1887 he was promoted Lieutenant-Colonel. From 1888 to 1890 Colonel Hepper was the Commandant of the Royal Engineers in Guernsey, and from 1890 to 1892 he was Assistant Commandant of the School of Military Engineering at Chatham. From 1892 to 1896, when he retired from the Army, he was a Member of the Ordnance Committee, and from 1897 to 1906 Engineering Inspector, Local Government Board. The "Times" of 26 April, 1915, says: "On 23 April, at 4, Durham Terrace, Westbourne Gardens, Colonel A. J. Hepper, D.S.O., R.E., retired, aged 75."

MONEY, GORDON LORN CAMPBELL, Major, was born 14 Sept. 1848, 3rd son of the late William J. H. Money, Bengal Civil Service, and Elizabeth, daughter of the late William Moffat, of Eden Hall, Roxburghshire. He was educated at a private school, and at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and joined the 79th Highlanders 8 Feb. 1868. He was promoted Lieut. in 1871; Captain in 1880, and Major in 1884. He served with the Nile Expedition, 1884–85, and for his services received the Medal and clasp and the Khedive's Bronze Star. On the 11th May, 1885, Major G. L. C. Money was appointed Assistant Military Secretary to Lieut.-General Sir Frederick Stephenson, commanding in Lower Egypt, and in that capacity took part in the operations in the Sudan in 1885 and 1886. He held the appointment until 1887; was mentioned in Sir F. Stephenson's Despatches 9 Feb. 1886, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "For action at Ginniss. Gordon Lorn Campbell Money, Major, Cameron Highlanders." The fourth class of the Order of the Osmamieh was conferred upon Major Money by His Highness the Khedive. In 1888 he became Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel. In 1893 he married Ellin, 3rd daughter of the late Major-General Ross, I.S.C., and they have one son and two daughters. On the 21st May, 1894, Lieut.-Colonel G. L. C. Money, D.S.O., took over command of the regiment from Lieut.-Colonel A. Y. Leslie, who, owing to ill-health, had not been with the battalion since Aug. 1893, and Lieut.-Colonel Money had been acting in temporary command during his absence. On the 21st Jan. 1895, Lieut.-Colonel Money was appointed A.D.C. to the Queen with the brevet rank of Colonel. As he was the first A.D.C. to Queen Victoria selected from the Cameron Highlanders, his appointment was received in the regiment with the greatest pride and satisfaction. He arrived at Alexandria with the 1st Battn. Cameron Highlanders on 4 Oct. 1897; went up the Nile on 14 Jan. 1898, and on 8 April, 1898, "the troops were formed for the assault, the Cameron Highlanders, under Colonel G. L. C. Money, D.S.O., A.D.C., being deployed into line in front of the British Brigade." For its conduct during the battle the regiment received Royal permission for "Atbara" to be inscribed upon its colours and appointments. Colonel Money was mentioned in the Sirdar's Despatch of 24 May, 1898, and the Queen, in her congratulatory telegram to Sir H. Kitchener, said: "Am proud of the gallantry of my soldiers; so glad my Cameron Highlanders should have been amongst them." Lieut.-Colonel Money became Colonel 6 June, 1903. He commanded the Cameron Highlanders in the Battle of Omdurman (when his horse was shot under him), and was present at the Memorial Service for General Gordon at Khartum. He was mentioned in Sir H. Kitchener's Despatches of the 30th Sept. and 8th Dec. 1898, and created a C.B. [London Gazette, 15 Nov. 1898]. On the 15th Oct. 1898, Colonel Money was presented with an address of welcome in the Town Hall of Inverness. He received the Khedive's Medal with clasps for Atbara and Khartum, and the English Medal. Colonel Money commanded the 1st Battn. Cameron Highlanders till the 21st May, 1899. In 1901 he was appointed A.D.C. to Kind Edward VII.; was Brigadier-General on the Staff in Ceylon, and retired 14 Sept. 1905. He holds the Jubilee and Coronation Medals. He is a D.L. and a J.P. for Berwickshire. Brigadier-General Money's favourite recreations are shooting and fishing.

QUIRK, JOHN OWEN, Major, was born 13 Aug. 1847, 3rd son of the late Philip Quirk, of Knockaloe House, Bromborough, Cheshire, and of Annie Eliza, daughter of Edmund Brown Wilton, of Limerick. He was educated at a private school, and at Trinity College, Dublin (B.A.), and joined the 41st (The Welsh) Regt. on 1 Dec. 1869. He became Captain in 1880; and served in the Boer War of 1881, in the Transvaal Campaign, with the Natal Field Force. Colonel Andrew Haggard tells how Colonel Valentine Baker, late of the 10th Hussars, relinquished a high command in the Turkish Army to come to Egypt and reorganize the Egyptian Army. "Baker Pasha did his part of the business excessively well; but when all was ready, and the recruits for the new regiments were actually being raised by conscription among the young men in the provinces—when his lists of officers, both English and Egyptian, were all ready—there occurred a contretemps which was to rob him of all the fruits of his toil, and to prevent his becoming the Sirdar or Commander-in-Chief. Her Majesty the Queen intimated to her Ministers that she would not allow Baker Pasha to be in any position in which he would have English full-pay officers under his command. The whole thing was at a deadlock at once. What was to be done? Baker behaved splendidly. Although between two stools he had fallen to the ground—for he could not go back to Turkey, and could not command the new Egyptian Army—he handed over all his arrangements unconditionally to the British authorities, and told them to place them in the hands of any other man whom they might select. Another man was chosen in the person of Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., and he became the Sirdar of the new Egyptian Army at a salary of £5,000 a year, while Baker . . . was relegated to the command of the gendarmerie, both horse and foot, all worthless troops, as they proved afterwards at the first battle of El Teb. . . . In addition to myself, Stuart Wortley, Slade and Pigott . . . I will give below the names of the others who joined the force of the Egyptians under Major-General Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., G.C.M.G., K.C.B., himself an officer well deserving all the letters of the alphabet which a grateful War Office has tacked on to his name. The remainder of the little band under his orders from the first start off were as follows: Lieut.-Colonel Grenfell and Major C. Holled Smith, both of the 60th Royal Rifles; Lieut.-Colonel Fraser, C.M.G., Major Watson, Capt. and Brevet Major Chermside, Capt. Kitchener and Lieut. Mantell, all Sappers; Lieut.-Colonel Duncan, Capt. Wodehouse, Lieuts. Parsons, Rundle and Carter, Gunners; Lieut.-Colonel Taylor, 19th Hussars; Lieut. Sinclair, Indian Cavalry (the only Indian); Capt. and Brevet Major Parr, 13th Light Infantry, who, like Pigott, had been wounded in the leg while serving in the Mounted Infantry in the 1882 Campaign; Capt. Shakespear and Lieut. Marriott, Royal Marine Artillery; Capt. Owen Quirk, 41st Welsh Regt.; Major A. Singleton Wynne, 51st Regt.; Lieut. Chamley Turner, 53rd Shropshire Regt., and Lieut. Davidson, 79th Highlanders." Major Quirk served in the Egyptian Expedition of 1884 in the Sudan, being employed on transport duties, and was present at the Battles of El Teb and Tamai, and in the advance on Tamanieb. He was mentioned in Despatches, and received the Medal with clasp and the Bronze Star. He took part in the Sudan Expedition of 1884–85 (Nile), and was employed on the lines of communication, as A.A.G. to the Egyptian Army. He was present at the action of Ginniss (horse shot); was mentioned in Despatches; received a clasp to his Egyptian Medal, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "John Owen Quirk, Major, Welsh Regt. For action at Ginniss." He again saw active service in the Sudan with the Nile Field Force in 1889, as Commandant of Korosko, and for his services received the 3rd Class Osmanieh. Major Quirk became Lieutenant-Colonel in 1893; was created a C.B. in 1897; promoted Colonel 26 Jan. 1899, and commanded the 41st Regimental District until Jan. 1904. He married in 1875, Eugenie Marie, daughter of the late Octavius O'Brien, of Kildare Street, Dublin.

HUNTER, ARCHIBALD, Capt. and Brevet Major, was born 6 Sept. 1856. He was educated at Glasgow Academy, and Sandhurst; joined the Army as Sub-Lieutenant (unattached) 13 June, 1874; was gazetted to the 4th The King's Own Regt., afterwards Royal Lancaster Regt., 13 June, 1874; Lieutenant, Instructor of Musketry, 4th Foot, 25 Jan. 1879, to 19 April, 1880. He was Adjutant Royal Lancaster Regt. 20 April, 1880, to 11 Nov. 1882, and became Captain, Royal Lancaster Regt., 3 Aug. 1882. He was employed with the Egyptian Army 28 Feb. 1884, to 19 Jan. 1887; and 11 March, 1888, to April, 1899; served in the Sudan Expedition, 1884–85 (Nile), with the Egyptian Army. Colonel Andrew Haggard says, in "Under Crescent and Star" (page 331): "The black regiment . . . was the 9th Battn. of the Egyptian Army, commanded by Archibald Hunter, a splendid fellow, and . . . raised during the past year entirely from Sudanese negroes, many of them being those who had been sent back from Suakin, whilst others had come from Khartoum." He was mentioned in Despatches; received the Medal with clasp, and the Bronze Star; was given the Brevet of Major 15 June, 1885, and 4th Class Osmanieh. He again served in the Sudan 1885–86–89; was present at the action of Ginniss; was severely wounded; mentioned in Despatches; received the 3rd Class Medjidie, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "Archibald Hunter, Capt. and Brevet Major, R. Lanc. R. For action at Ginniss." Present at action of Arguin; at the action of Toski (wounded); in command of a Brigade of the Egyptian Army. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 6 Sept. 1889]; received a clasp and the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 17 Aug. 1889. He was promoted to Major 15 June, 1892; and was Governor of the Red Sea Littoral, and Commandant, Suakin, 11 Aug. 1892, to 28 July, 1894. He was Governor of the Frontier, and Commandant, Field Force, Egypt, 29 July, 1894, to 30 Nov. 1896. In the Expedition to Dongola in 1896, he commanded the Egyptian Infantry Division, taking part in the operations of the 7th June and 19th Sept. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 3 Nov. 1896]; received the Medal and the Egyptian Medal with two clasps, and was promoted to Major-General for distinguished service 18 Nov. 1896. From 1 Dec. 1896, to 6 April, 1899, Major-General Hunter was Governor of Dongola Province, and Commandant, Field Force, Egypt. In the Nile Expedition of 1897 he was in command of columns, and took part in the action at Abu Hamed, in the occupation of Herber and the Flying Column to the Atbara. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 25 Jan. 1898]; received the 2nd Class Osmanieh and two clasps to the Egyptian Medal. In the Nile Expedition of 1898 he commanded the four Infantry Divisions of the Egyptian Army, also the Cavalry Reconnaissances of the 30th March and 4th April, and was present at the Battles of Atbara and Khartoum. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 24 May and 30 Sept. 1898]; was created a K.C.B.; thanked by both Houses of Parliament, and received two clasps to the Egyptian Medal. Sir Archibald Hunter was Major-General, in India, 14 May, 1899, to 5 May, 1901. He was Major-General (Chief of Staff), Natal, from 21 Sept. 1899, to 8 Oct. 1899; Chief of Staff, South Africa, from 9 Oct. 1899, to 9 Jan. 1900; Chief of Staff, Natal, from 10 Jan. 1900, to 5 March, 1900; and Lieutenant-General Infantry Division 6 March, 1900, to 5 May, 1901 (promoted to Lieutenant-General 6 March, 1900). His services in the South African War from 1899 to 1901 were as follows: Chief of Staff, South Africa, afterwards Chief of Staff, Natal. Operations in Natal, 1899, including operations at Rietfontein and Lombard's Kop. Defence of Ladysmith, including sortie of 7 Dec. 1899. In command of the 10th Division. Operations in Cape Colony, North of Orange River, April and May, 1900, including action at Ruidam. Operations in the Transvaal in May and June, 1900. In command of operations in Orange River Colony, July to Nov. 1900, including action at Wittebergen (29 July), and Witpoort. Commanded in Orange River Colony 9 Nov. 1900, to 24 Jan. 1901. Despatches [London Gazette, 8 Feb. 1901] (Sir G. S. White, 2 Dec. 1899, and 23 March, 1900, and Lord Roberts, 25 Sept. 1900), and Despatches [London Gazette, 16 April, 1901. Queen's Medal with six clasps. Promoted Lieutenant-General for distinguished service. In his "History of the Great Boer War," Sir A. Conan Doyle describes Sir A. Hunter as the "youngest and most dashing of British Generals," and says that in the operations when he occupied Heidelberg, "Ian Hamilton broke his collar-bone, and for a time the command of his division passed to Hunter—the one man, perhaps, whom the Army would regard as an adequate successor." From 6 May, 1901, to 30 Sept. 1903, Sir A. Hunter was Lieutenant-General, Scottish District, and he was G.O.C., Southern Army, India, from 30 Oct. 1903, to 29 Oct. 1908. He became General on 8 Dec. 1905. From 30 Sept. 1910, to 1 July, 1913, he was Governor and Commander-in-Chief at Gibraltar. He was created a G.C.B. in 1911, and a G.C.V.O. in 1912. General Hunter commanded the Aldershot Training Centre from 23 Aug. 1914, and the 4th Army in 1914. He is Colonel of the King's Own Lancaster Regt. In 1910 Sir A. Hunter married Mary, daughter of Hickson Fergusson and widow of the 2nd Lord Inverclyde. He was elected M.P. for Lancaster Division at the General Election in 1918 as a Coalition Unionist. There is a graphic account of the Sortie from Ladysmith on 7 Dec. 1899 (described by Sir Ian Hamilton as "a brilliant stroke of arms"), in General Sir Frederick Maurice's official "History of the War in South Africa, 1899–1902," published by Messrs. Hurst and Blackett. We cannot resist the temptation to quote it here: "The practice of the 94-pr. gun and a 4.7-in. Howitzer on Gun Hill had for some time been so harassing that Brevet Major D. Henderson, Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, D.A.A.G. for Intelligence on Sir G. White's Staff, asked leave to make an attempt with 50 men to destroy them at night. Permission was at first refused; subsequently, however, it was decided to carry through the enterprise with a stronger body. A force of 650 men was therefore placed under the command of Major-General Sir A. Hunter, the Chief of the Staff. It consisted of 500 Natal Carbineers, under Colonel Royston; 100 Imperial Light Horse, under Lieut.-Colonel A. H. M. Edwards, 5th Dragoon Guards; 18 of the Corps of Guides, under Brevet Major D. Henderson; a detachment Royal Engineers, under Capt. G. H. Fowke, R.E., and a detachment of No. 10 Mountain Battery. The venture was perfectly successful. As a preliminary, the 1st Devon Regt., moving out after dark, entrenched in a covering position north of the Helpmakaar Ridge. Skilfully led by Major Henderson and his guides, the column, marching in sections, then covered the two miles of rough scrub-grown country between the Helpmakaar Ridge and Gun Hill without incident or confusion, despite the black darkness, and by 2 a.m. reached the base of the flat-topped under-feature whereon stood the Boer guns. Shortly before this the force had divided. The main body of the Natal Carbineers branched out to right and left to cover the flanks, and now, between these wings, 200 men, taken equally from the Imperial Light Horse and the rest of the Natal Carbineers, lined up for assault. The surprise was complete. Sweeping aside the piquet, which confronted them with a hurried fire, the troopers of the Imperial Light Horse broke into the work containing the 94-pr., the Natal Carbineers soon afterwards discovering that of the 4.7-in. Howitzer. Charges of cotton were fixed on the breeches and muzzles of both guns and successfully fired with fuses ignited by burning cigars. Sir A. Hunter then called for three cheers for H.M. the Queen, and collecting his force, of which Major Henderson and seven men were wounded, withdrew in safety, taking with him a Maxim captured on the hill. By 7 a.m. all were back in Ladysmith."

Archibald Hunter.

There is an appreciation of Sir Archibald Hunter written by the late G. W. Steevens in "With Kitchener to Khartum": "If the Sirdar is the brain of the Egyptian Army, General Hunter is its sword-arm. First and above everything he is a fighter. For fourteen years he has been in the front of all the fighting on the Southern border. He was Intelligence Officer during the anxious days before Ginnis, when the Camerons and 9th Sudanese were beset by triumphant Dervishes in Kosheh fort, and reinforcements were far to the northward. Going out on a sortie one day, he lingered behind the retiring force to pick off Dervishes with a rifle he was wont to carry on such occasions: there he received a wound in the shoulder which he is not quit of to-day. When Nejumi came down in '89, Hunter was in the front of everything: he fought all day at the head of the blacks at Argin, and commanded a brigade of them at Toski. Here he was again wounded—a spear-thrust in the arm while he was charging the thickest of the dervishes at the head of the 13th. Thereafter he was Governor of the frontier at Halfa, Governor of the frontier at Dongola, Governor of the frontier at Berber—always on the frontier. When there was fighting he always led the way to it with his blacks, whom he loves like children, and who love him like a father. Fourteen years of bugle and bullet by night and day, in summer and winter, fighting dervishes, dervishes, year in and year out—till fighting dervishes has come to be a holy mission pursued with zeal and fanaticism. Hunter Pasha is the crusader of the nineteenth century. In all he is and does he is the true knight-errant—a paladin drifted into his wrong century. He is one of those happy men whom nature has made all in one piece—consistent, simple, unvarying; everything he does is just like him. He is short and thick-set; but that, instead of making him unromantic, only draws your eye to his long sword. From the feather in his helmet to the spurs on his heels, he is all energy and dancing triumph; every movement is vivacious, and he walks with his keen, conquering hazel eye looking out and upwards, like an eagle's. Sometimes you will see on his face a look of strain and tension, which tells of the wound he always carries with him. Then you will see him lolling under a palm tree, while his staff are sitting on chairs, light brown hair rumpled over his bare head, like a happy schoolboy. When I first saw him thus, being blind, I conceived him a subaltern, and offered opinions with indecorous freedom. He left the error to rebuke itself. Reconnoitring almost alone up to the muzzles of the enemy's rifles, charging bare-headed and cheering on his blacks, going without his rest to watch over the comfort of the wounded, he is always the same—always the same impossible hero of a book of chivalry. He is renowned as a brave man even among British officers: you know what that means. But he is much more than a tilting knight-errant: he is one of the finest leaders of troops in the Army. Report has it that the Sirdar, knowing his worth, leaves the handling of the actual fighting largely to Hunter, and he never fails to plan and execute a masterly victory. A sound and brilliant general, you would say that his one fault was his reckless daring; but that too, in an army of semi-savages, is a necessary quality of generalship. Furthermore, they say he is as good in an office as he is in action. Above all, he can stir and captivate and lead men. 'General Archie' is the wonder and the darling of all the Egyptian Army."

George Evan Lloyd.

LLOYD, GEORGE EVAN, Capt., was born in 1855, son of the Rev. Rhys Thomas Lloyd (brother of the 1st Baronet, of Bronwydd, Cardiganshire), and of Anna, daughter of Lewis Lloyd, Esq., of Nantgwilt, co. Radnor. He served in the Afghan War, 1878–79 (Medal and clasp). For his services in the Sudan

Campaign in 1885–86, he was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "George Evan Lloyd, Capt. and Brevet Major, South Yorkshire Regt. For action at Ginniss." The Insignia of the Order were presented to him by Queen Victoria. He became Major, South Staffordshire Regt., and was attached to the Egyptian Army, with the temporary rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. He held the 3rd Class Medjidie. Lieut.-Colonel G. E. Lloyd died on 29 Nov. 1900.

MARRIOTT, REGINALD ADAMS, Capt. and Brevet Major, was born in Nov. 1857; joined the Royal Marine Artillery in Oct. 1875. He served on H.M.S. Monarch, and during the French operations at Tunis was employed as Secretary to the Sfax Commission. On the Institution of the Distinguished Service Order, Capt. Marriott was selected specially for services rendered before the bombardment of Alexandria, when he inspected the Mex Forts in the guise of an Italian ship's stoker; for work in the Consulate at Alexandria before and during the massacre; and generally for the excellence of the training and special equipment of the Egyptian Camel Corps, which acted as Mounted Infantry for the River Column in the Gordon Relief Expedition. Capt. Marriott was of the first landing party directly after the bombardment, and his Order was given him partly for work done before that, so he could certainly claim to be one of the very first Companions of the Distinguished Service Order. He afterwards served with the Royal Marine Battn. at Kassassin and Tel-el-Kebir, being mentioned in Despatches. He joined the Egyptian Army from the day of its formation, and was first Drill and Musketry Instructor to the native recruits, and subsequently organized and commanded the Egyptian Camel Corps in the Nile Expedition, 1885–86. Colonel Andrew Haggard describes on page 388 of "Under Crescent and Star" how, "although Marriott and Smith-Dorrien, both Egyptians, pushed on with both the Egyptian and British Camel Corps and Mounted Infantry, and captured nine of the enemy's barges laden with arms and food, Abri was as far as the remainder of the troops went up the Nile. In fact, the advance on Abri ended the campaign." He was given the Brevet of Major 23 March, 1886; was mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "Reginald Adams Marriott, Capt. and Brevet Major, Royal Marine Artillery. For the action at Ginniss." The Insignia of the Order were presented to him by Queen Victoria on the first occasion of the Investiture of the Order 17 Dec. 1886. He was afterwards invited with others to breakfast at Osborne, where they signed their names in the Queen's birthday-book. Capt. Marriott, for his services in Egypt, also received the Medal with four clasps, the 4th Class Osmanieh and the 5th Class Medjidie. He was in the Naval Intelligence Department for five years, from its formation in 1887. After Major Marriott's retirement from the Royal Marine Artillery on 2 Aug. 1891, he joined H.M. Prison Service, and has been Governor of Lincoln, Chelmsford and Lewes Prisons. He was ent to the Intelligence Department of the Admiralty during the war. He s an acknowledged linguist, and has written on natural science, championing General Drayson's discovery in astronomy, in "The Change of Climate and its Cause," "The Glacial Epoch Explained," and other pamphlets on geology and kindred subjects.

Reginald Adams Marriott.

SMITH-DORRIEN, HORACE LOCKWOOD, Capt., was born 26 May, 1858, son of Colonel R. A. Smith-Dorrien and Mrs. Smith-Dorrien, of Haresfoot, Berkhampstead. He was educated at Harrow, and entered the Sherwood Foresters (Derby Regt.) on 26 Feb. 1876. He served in the Zulu War of 1879; was one of the few survivors of Isandhlwana, and was recommended for a V.C.; was at the Battle of Ulundi; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 15 and 21 March, 1879], and received the Medal and clasp. He took part in the Egyptian Expedition of 1882; raised and commanded a corps of Mounted Infantry; received a Medal and clasp, and the Bronze Star. Sir Evelyn Wood wrote: "Horace Smith-Dorrien has done brilliant work in North and South Africa and in India. It is needless to repeat what the Commander-in-Chief wrote of his conduct in the Retreat from Mons, which must have made his wife and all his friends proud. In 1882 I was left twelve miles outside Alexandria with six battalions to cover a frontage of over five miles, which in the previous weeks, before the departure of another brigade, had been penetrated by small parties of the enemy, sixteen of whom had been killed in one garden. I sent an order into Alexandria for a smart subaltern, who was to go to the Khedive's stable and all the saddlers' shops and produce in one day some mounted infantry. Smith-Dorrien received the order at 1.30 p.m., and at 6.30., with twenty-one horses, three mules and a donkey, carrying Derbyshire men, the Sherwood Foresters—few of whom had ridden before—he passed me at Ramleh, and went out into the desert, engaged an Egyptian outpost, killed its commander, and never let the enemy inside our line of outposts again." Lieut. Smith-Dorrien became Captain 22 Aug. 1882. He served with the Egyptian Army in the Nile Expedition (1884), and with Mounted Infantry in the Sudan Expedition (1885) (clasp). He again saw active service in the Sudan in 1885–86, with the Frontier Field Force. For his services in this last campaign Capt. Smith-Dorrien was mentioned in Despatches, awarded the 4th Class Medjidie and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "Horace Lockwood Smith-Dorrien, Capt., Derbyshire Regt. For action at Ginniss." The Insignia were presented to him by the Queen. At the Battle of Ginniss, when the Dervishes were retreating, the cavalry posted to cut them off had failed to do so. Capt. Smith-Dorrien, at that time a Lieutenant-Colonel on the Staff of the Egyptian Army, was thereupon ordered to take a mixed mounted force of cavalry and mounted infantry, and to pursue—with strict orders not to go beyond—to Koheymatto, 19 miles distant. He, however, took on himself to go 60 miles, cutting across the desert to cut the Dervishes off at Absarat, accomplishing this in 23 hours, cutting off and capturing all the enemy's river transport, many prisoners and booty. Being successful, his disobedience was rewarded with the D.S.O., as above recorded. It was one of the first ever given. In 1887 he received the 4th Class of the Osmanieh, and the same year joined the Staff College, where he gained the p.s.c. He became Major 11 May, 1892; was D.A.A.G., Bengal, 1893–94; A.A.G., Bengal, 1894–96. He was D.A.A.G. of a brigade in the Chitral Relief Force in 1895. In 1897–98 he served in the Sherwood Foresters in the Tirah Campaign, on the North-West Frontier of India; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 30 Sept. 1898]; was given the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 20 May, 1898; received the Medal and two clasps. He served with the Nile Expedition of 1898, and in the pursuit after the Battle of Omdurman was the first to break into the Mahdi's house. He commanded the troops which accompanied Lord Kitchener to Fashoda. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 30 Sept. 1898]; received the Brevet of Colonel 16 Nov. 1898, and the Medal. He served in the South African War, 1899–1900, first in command of the 1st Battn. Sherwood Foresters, and then as a Major-General commanding a brigade and a division. At Paardeberg, Sir Conan Doyle writes in his "Great Boer War" (page 253), "Smith-Dorrien's Brigade, who were winning in the western army something of the reputation which Hart's Irishmen had won in Natal, were placed astride of the river to the west, with orders to push gradually up, as occasion served, using trenches for their approach." Sir Conan Doyle goes on to describe the battle, and later says: "The two brigades at either end of the Boer lines had lost no chance of pushing in, and now they had come within striking distance. On the night of 26 Feb. it was determined that Smith-Dorrien's men should try their luck. The front trenches of the British were at that time seven hundred yards from the Boer lines. They were held by the Gordons and by the Canadians, the latter being the nearer to the river. It is worth while entering into details as to the arrangement of the attack, as the success of the campaign was at least accelerated by it. The orders were that the Canadians were to advance, the Gordons to support, and the Shropshires to take such a position on the left as would outflank any counter-attack upon the part of the Boers. The Canadians advanced in the darkness of the early morning before the rise of the moon. The front rank held their rifles in the left hand and each extended right hand grasped the sleeve of the man next it. The rear rank had their rifles slung and carried spades. Nearest the river bank were two companies (G and H), who were followed by the 7th Company of Royal Engineers carrying picks and empty sand-bags. The long line stole through a pitchy darkness, knowing that at any instant a blaze of fire such as flamed before the Highlanders at Magersfontein might crash out in front of them. A hundred, two, three, four, five hundred paces were taken. They knew that they must be close upon the trenches. If they could only creep silently enough, they might spring upon the defenders unannounced. On and on they stole, step by step, praying for silence. Would the gentle shuffle of feet be heard by the men who lay within stone-throw of them? Their hopes had begun to rise when there broke upon the silence of the night a resonant metallic rattle, the thud of a falling man, an empty clatter! They had walked into a line of meat-cans slung upon a wire. By measurement it was only ninety yards from the trench. At that instant a single rifle sounded, and the Canadians hurled themselves down upon the ground. Their bodies had hardly touched it when from a line six hundred yards long there came one furious glare of rifle fire, with a hiss like water on a red-hot plate, of speeding bullets. In that terrible red light the men as they lay and scraped desperately for cover could see the heads of the Boers pop up and down, and the fringe of rifle barrels quiver and gleam. How the regiment, lying helpless under this fire, escaped destruction is extraordinary. To rush the trench in the face of such a continuous blast of lead seemed impossible, and it was equally impossible to remain where they were. In a short time the moon would be up, and they would be picked off to a man. The outer companies upon the plain were ordered to retire. Breaking up into loose order, they made their way back with surprisingly little loss; but a strange contretemps occurred, for, leaping suddenly into a trench held by the Gordons, they transfixed themselves upon the bayonets of the men. A subaltern and twelve men received bayonet thrusts—none of them fortunately of a very serious nature." He was promoted to Major-General 11 Feb. 1900, for distinguished service at the Battle of Paardeberg; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 8 Feb. and 16 April, 1901, and 29 July, 1902], and received the Queen's Medal with four clasps. He was Adjutant-General in India, 1901–3; commanded the 4th (Quetta) Division in India, 1903–7; was created a K.C.B. in 1904; promoted to Lieutenant-General on 9 April, 1906, and became Commander-in-Chief, Aldershot, 1907. He was promoted to General 10 Aug. 1912; held the Southern command, 1912–14; and was created a G.C.B. in 1913. General Sir Horace Smith-Dorrien commanded first the 2nd Army Corps, and then the 2nd Army, British Expeditionary Force, 1914–15. The Commander-in-Chief said in his Despatches regarding the Battle of Le Cateau: "I cannot close the brief account of this glorious stand without putting on record my deep appreciation of the services of Sir Horace Smith-Dorrien. I say without hesitation that the saving of the left wing of the Army under my command on the morning of 26th Aug. could never have been accomplished unless a Commander of rare and unusual coolness, intrepidity and determination had been present to personally conduct the operation." Major A. Corbett Smith says in his "Retreat from Mons": "If the Commander-in-Chief owed much to General Smith-Dorrien, I can only say that the Second Corps would have stormed the gates of Hell for their leader, and would have trusted in him implicitly to bring them through." When Lord French wrote his book, "1914," he had changed his mind about General Smith-Dorrien. The Hon. John Fortescue reviewed the Field-Marshal's book in the "Quarterly Review" of Oct. 1919. Mr. Fortescue gives Lord French credit for his own part in the war. He says: "On 19 Oct. the 1st Corps came in from the Aisne, and Lord French had to make up his mind whether he should use it to reinforce his sorely-tried troops from Menin southward to La Bassée, or to meet, by a counter-offensive, the enemy's threats against Ypres and the Yser. On the one hand, if the Germans succeeded in driving a wedge through the British at some point south of Menin—and the place of junction with the French about La Bassée was likely to be chosen for the purpose—then they would either force the British Army to surrender or drive it into the sea. On the other hand, if they broke through the line about Ypres or to the north of it, they would reach the seaboard and master the Channel Ports. Lord French, as he puts it, had to choose between the certain disaster of losing the Channel Ports and the less certain though, if it should overtake him, more overwhelming disaster of being driven into the sea. He decided to avert the certain disaster, thereby taking terrible risks, and the event showed that his judgment was correct. This, in our opinion, is the one great thing that Lord French did during his period of command on the Western Front, and too gladly admit that it was really and truly great. He had every right to select for himself the title of Lord French of Ypres." Mr. Fortescue also says: "No man, it has been well said, was ever written down except by himself, and we wish that Lord French had pondered this aphorism before he sat down to write his book. The Field-Marshal, at the opening of the war, enjoyed a military reputation which was second only to Lord Kitchener's in this country, and he had worthily earned it. The memories of South Africa are swamped in those of the past five terrible years, yet there are some who have not yet forgotten the name of Colesberg, and the excellent and audacious service of General French, which is associated with that name. At the close of the Boer War no one was surprised to see him rise successively to the command of the 1st Army Corps at Aldershot, to the Inspectorship-General of the Forces, and to the supreme post of Chief of the General Staff. Lord Haldane has testified to the valuable assistance which he received from Sir John French in preparing the forces of the Empire for the great struggle which has been so recently brought to a successful end; and this is a thing which we must never forget. The time will come when the country will set aside old political prejudices and acknowledge the vast debt which it owes to Lord Haldane; and then the names of the officers who were associated with him in his reorganization of the forces of the Empire will likewise be remembered with honour. The country, therefore, heard with confidence and satisfaction of the appointment of Sir John French to command the British Expeditionary Force in Aug. 1914. People hardly realized that his army was, though small in numbers, incomparably the best trained, the best equipped, the best organized and the best disciplined that Britain had ever put into the field." A good part of Mr. Fortescue's review of Lord French's book, however, is given up to a criticism of Lord French's change of front about General Smith-Dorrien, whom he had previously so highly praised in his Despatches. Major-General Sir F. Maurice, K.C.M.G., wrote an article in the "National Review" for Nov. 1919, on "The 'Unnecessary' Battle of Le Cateau." General Maurice was at that time on the Staff of Sir Hubert Hamilton, Commanding the 3rd Division of the 2nd Corps. He tells us how the 7th Brigade had been marching and fighting since 3 a.m. on the 25th; moreover, a good part of the men had not reached their billets at Caudry. "General Hamilton," he says, "then made up his mind that the 3rd Division was not in condition to carry out Sir Horace's orders for retreat, and at once went off to the 2nd Corps Headquarters, which were close by. Hamilton took me with him in case he wished to send me back with fresh orders. Almost simultaneously, Allenby arrived with Vaughan, his Senior General Staff Officer, and a conference with Sir Horace took place between 1 and 2 a.m. I was not present at the conference, but immediately it was over Hamilton came out and said to me: 'Smith-Dorrien is a man. He has decided to stand and fight.' On the way back to our headquarters he told me that he had informed Sir Horace that he did not think he could get the 3rd Division formed for retreat before 9 a.m., that Allenby had said that, in his opinion, it would be necessary to retire before daylight if we were to avoid a battle, and that owing to his division being so scattered, he would be unable to cover the retreat the next morning. Sir Horace, thereupon determined to take command of the cavalry, of the 19th Brigade, and of the 4th Division, in addition to his own corps, and to fight. This version of Allenby's conversation with Sir Horace is, I may point out, very different to that given by Lord French." At the conclusion of his article Sir F. Maurice says: "As to the strength and position of the German troops, we know that Sir Horace was right, and that Lord French was wrong. Personally, I believed at the time that Sir Horace's decision to fight on the 26th saved us from disaster, and everything that I have learnt since has confirmed me in that opinion. It required great courage to make such a decision, contrary to the orders of the Commander-in-Chief, and it was a decision which, I believe, history will not only justify but commend. A commander-in-chief is entitled to form his own opinion of a subordinate, and to act on that opinion, but when, after praising him publicly, he condemns him publicly, and for his change of opinion gives reasons which are wrong in almost every particular, his opinion ceases to carry weight." Mr. Fortescue, in his article in the "Quarterly Review," goes fully into Lord French's somewhat belated criticisms of General Smith-Dorrien's action at Le Cateau, which he had previously praised. He describes the events leading up to the Battle of Le Cateau from the time when Sir James Grierson died suddenly and Lord French asked that Sir Herbert Plumer might take General Grierson's place in command of the 2nd Corps. Lord Kitchener preferred to send Sir Horace Smith-Dorrien, who had risen to fame in the Derbyshire regiment, which he commanded when the Transvaal War began. He held important staff appointments, and was specially selected to attend His Majesty the King during his visit to India in 1910–11. All soldiers had the highest opinion of his capacity in the field, which he had proved as a junior officer in Egypt and in high command in South Africa. Lord Kitchener's selection of this gallant officer was highly appreciated in the Army. Mr. Fortescue says: "The Field-Marshal's orders were for the retreat to be continued on the 26th, and General Smith-Dorrien had issued his commands accordingly to the 2nd Corps. It was past midnight, however, before he could ascertain the whereabouts of all his troops; and then he discovered that the 4th Division, which had joined the army on the 25th, was in isolation in advance of his line, that his troops were greatly exhausted, and that the cavalry was so weary and so much dispersed, that it could not be counted on longer to cover the retreat. He therefore took his memorable decision to stand and fight, in spite of the Field-Marshal's orders. Lord French condemns this resolution, omitting, however, to say anything about the situation of the 4th Division. . . . In his Despatch of 7 Sept. 1914, the Field-Marshal gave General Smith-Dorrien full credit for the cool courage he had shown in accepting battle at Le Cateau. Further, he by implication blamed the French General Sordet, for failing to help Smith-Dorrien. In the volume before us he takes back his praise, alleging that when he wrote his despatch, he was unaware of the service rendered by General Sordet; and he now contends that but for General Sordet, Sir Horace would have been pinned to his ground and surrounded. Now it is an indisputable fact, established by documentary evidence, that General Smith-Dorrien, in addition to writing his own thanks to General Sordet and recounting his obligations to him in a special order to his troops, reported within three days to Lord French himself the good help that he had received from General Sordet, and begged that thanks might be sent to him through General Joffre. . . . Lord French contends that without General Sordet, General Smith-Dorrien would never have escaped. Yet the safe retreat of the 2nd Corps was assured long before General Sordet came into action." Not long since, when the shooting began at Phœnix Park, a Roman Catholic priest, whose family has the proud distinction of having in old days killed the heir to the throne of England, the Earl of March, was speaking of the alarming outlook. This priest's sympathies are with the so-called ideals of the Sinn Feiners, though not altogether with the means they use to attain their objects in life. He said: "No, I don't think they'll shoot Lord French. After all, he is Irish and a famous soldier, and belongs to a good old Irish family. But they don't altogether approve of him." One gathers from "1914" that Lord French shares to the full the gallantry, the prejudice, the glorious inconsistency of the fellow-countrymen he has tried to govern. This Irish priest's family has been almost wiped out fighting for England in the Great War. Yet he resents the "meddlesomeness" of the English as much as any Sinn Feiner of them all. "Oh! that mine enemy had written a book!" said the wise man of old, and perhaps Lord French has in this case been his own worst enemy. But if he has by any means helped to bring peace to his torn and distracted country his literary indiscretions will surely be forgotten, or at least forgiven. In 1915, Sir Horace Smith-Dorrien was created a G.C.M.G. In 1915 and 1916 he commanded the East African Forces, which command a dangerous attack of pleuro-pneumonia compelled him to relinquish. He was made Grand Officier, Légion d'Honneur, by the French. In July, 1918, Sir Horace Smith-Dorrien was appointed Governor of Gibraltar. He married on 3 Sept. 1902, at St. Peter's, Eaton Square, Olive Crofton, eldest daughter of Colonel and Mrs. Schneider, of Oak Lea, Furness Abbey, and their children are: Grenfell Horace, Peter Lockwood and David Bromley.

Sir Ian Hamilton said: "Smith-Dorrien was one of my two brigadiers in the great march up from Bloemfontein to Pretoria; the other being Bruce Hamilton. He always proved himself a commander of judgment and mettle." Sir Conan Doyle, in describing the northern operations from Jan. to April, 1901, in his "Great Boer War," says on page 436: "The town of Belfast was strongly held by Smith-Dorrien with 1,750 men, of which 1,300 were infantry belonging to the Royal Irish, the Shropshires and the Gordons. The perimeter of defence, however, was fifteen miles, and each little fort too far from its neighbour for mutual support, though connected with headquarters by telephone. It is probable that the leaders and burghers engaged in this very gallant attack were in part the same as those concerned in the successful attempt at Helvetia upon 29 Dec., for the assault was delivered in the same way, at the same hour, and apparently with the same primary object. This was to gain possession of the big 5-inch gun, which is as helpless by night as it is formidable by day. At Helvetia they attained their object, and even succeeded not merely in destroying, but in removing their gigantic trophy. At Belfast they would have performed the same feat had it not been for the foresight of General Smith-Dorrien, who had the heavy gun trundled back into the town every night." Sir Conan Doyle says on pages 446–448 of the "Great Boer War": "In the month of Jan. 1901, there had been a considerable concentration of the Transvaal Boers into that large triangle which is bounded by the Delagoa railway line upon the north, the Natal railway line upon the south, and the Swazi and Zulu frontiers upon the east. . . . Their concentration had not escaped the notice of the British military authorities, who welcomed any movement which might bring to a focus that resistance which had been so nebulous and elusive. Lord Kitchener having once seen the enemy fairly gathered into this huge cover, undertook the difficult task of driving it from end to end. For this enterprise General French was given the chief command, and had under his orders no fewer than seven columns, which started from different points of the Delagoa and of the Natal railway lines, keeping in touch with each other, and all trending south and east." . . . Smith-Dorrien's was the most easterly of the three columns that started from the Delagoa line, and his went from Wonderfontein and later moved on Carolina, and thence on Bothwell, near Lake Chrissie. "The arduous duty of passing supplies down from the line fell mainly upon him, and his force was in consequence larger than the others, consisting of 3,500 men with thirteen guns." Sir Conan Doyle tells us how the seven columns, like a huge drag-net, closed in upon the Boers. "Cavalry and mounted infantry were all hot upon the scent. Botha, however, was a leader of spirit, not to be hustled with impunity. Having several thousand burghers with him, it was evident that if he threw himself suddenly upon any part of the British line he might hope for a time to make an equal fight, and possibly to overwhelm it. Were Smith-Dorrien out of the way there would be a clear road of escape for his whole convoy to the north, while a defeat of any of the other columns would not help him much. It was on Smith-Dorrien, therefore, that he threw himself with great impetuosity. That general's force was, however, formidable, consisting of the Suffolks, West Yorks, and Camerons, 5th Lancers, 2nd Imperial Light Horse, and 3rd Mounted Infantry, with eight field guns and three heavy pieces. Such a force could hardly be defeated in the open, but no one can foresee the effect of a night surprise well pushed home, and such was the attack delivered by Botha at 3 a.m. upon 6 Feb., when his opponent was encamped at Bothwell Farm. The night was favourable to the attempt, as it was dark and misty. Fortunately, however, the British commander had fortified himself and was ready for an assault. The Boer forlorn hope came on with a gallant dash, driving a troop of loose horses in upon the outposts, and charging forward into the camp. The West Yorkshires, however, who bore the brunt of the attack, were veterans of the Tugela, who were no more to be flurried at three in the morning than at three in the afternoon. The attack was blown backwards, and twenty dead Boers, with their brave leader Spruyt, were left within the British lines. The main body of the Boers contented themselves with a heavy fusillade out of the darkness, which was answered and crushed by the return fire of the infantry. In the morning no trace save their dead was to be seen of the enemy, but twenty killed and fifty wounded in Smith-Dorrien's column showed how heavy had been the fire which had swept through the sleeping camp. The Carolina attack, which was to have co-operated with that of the Heidelbergers, was never delivered, through difficulties of the ground, and considerable recriminations ensued among the Boers in consequence. Beyond a series of skirmishes and rearguard actions this attack of Botha's was the one effort made to stay the course of French's columns. It did not succeed, however, in arresting them for an hour. From that day began a record of captures of men, herds, guns, and wagons, as the fugitives were rounded up from the north, the west and the south."

HAGGARD, ANDREW CHARLES PARKER, Lieut.-Colonel, was born at Bradenham Hall, Norfolk, 7 Feb. 1854, 5th son of the late William Meybohm Rider Haggard, and Ella, daughter and co-heiress of the late Bazett Doveton, F.I.C.S. He was educated at Westminster School; joined The King's Own Borderers, afterwards The King's Own Scottish Borderers, in 1873; served in India and at Aden; also on the Staff in Egypt, 1882; was Adjutant, 1st Reserve Depôt, Ismailia, 1882, until the close of the operations against Arabi Pasha. He was one of the 25 officers who, under Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., in the year 1883, raised the new Egyptian Army, and owing to his knowledge of Arabic was sent to the different Provinces of Egypt to curb the injustices and cruelties of the Mudirs in their methods of raising recruits. He became Major and Second-in-Command of the 4th Battn. Egyptian Army, and subsequently Lieutenant-Colonel Commanding the 1st Battn. Being applied for by Admiral Sir William Hewett, V.C., Governor General of the Red Sea Littoral, he was attached to the Royal Navy and went on Special Service to Suakin in Feb. 1884, where he was instrumental in organizing the defences and in quelling a mutiny of two Black Regiments (one of which had previously served under General Gordon), which had deserted their posts to the danger of the capture of the town by the enemy, under Osman Digna. After assisting the landing of the Expeditionary Force under Sir Gerald Graham, V.C., he was attached to it, and was present at the Battle of Tamai and advance on Tamanieb (Medal with clasp, Khedive's Bronze Star; mentioned in Special Naval Despatches in April, 1884, and also in Army Despatches). He proceeded on H.M.S. Sphinx to Massowah; became Governor, and organized defences of that place in 1884; went subsequently to meet the Abyssinian brigand outlaw, Bal Ambaras Yasus Kefla, in the passes of the mountains of Bogos, and then on to Senheit and Keren; rescued a Swedish missionary from him, and induced him to open up the road to permit the egress of an Egyptian regiment cut off there under Khusru Bey, one of General Gordon's old officers. He surveyed part, and wrote itinerary of route to Khartoum, via Kassala, adopted by the Intelligence Department, War Office. He was in command of the 1st Battn. Egyptian Army at Suakin for a year, while the place was invested and constantly attacked by Osman Digna, 1884–85. He was present at the reconnaissance to Hasheen and operations of the British Army at Suakin, 1885 (4th Class Osmanieh); awarded "for distinguished services before the enemy" [London Gazette, 1885]. He was on a special recruiting commission with Brigadier General Yusuf Pasha Schudi, which reformed the abuses of the conscription in Upper Egypt. He commanded the 1st Battn. Egyptian Army in operations on the Nile, under General Sir Frederick Stephenson, including the Battle of Ginniss 1885–87, and subsequently commanded all the Egyptian troops on the Frontier. For his services in this campaign Lieut.-Colonel Haggard was mentioned in Despatches, and for those at the Battle of Ginniss he was awarded the, then new, distinction of the Companionship of the Distinguished Service Order, in the first Gazette of which Order his appointment was announced, 26 Nov. 1886: "For action at Ginniss, Andrew Charles Parker Haggard, Capt., King's Own Scottish Borderers." Lieut.-Colonel Andrew Haggard was awarded the 3rd Class of the Order of the Medjidieh for subsequent services in Egypt. In 1906 he married Ethel Fowler, of Whitestock Hall, Lancashire. He is a well-known sporting writer and novelist, and has published many French historical biographies. His favourite recreations are fishing, shooting and exploring, especially in connection with little-known rivers and districts in Canada. Since the outbreak of the Great War he has been instrumental in the formation of Veterans' Associations for men of both Services in British Columbia. A great many quotations have been made in this work from Colonel Haggard's valuable and charming book, "Under Crescent and Star."

RHODES, ELMHIRST, Capt., was born 28 April, 1858, son of the Rev. F. W. Rhodes, Rector of Bishop's Stortford. He was gazetted to the Royal Berkshire Regt. 25 May, 1878, and served in the Egyptian War of 1882, being present at the Surrender of Kafr Dowar (Medal and Bronze Star). He again saw active service in the Sudan Expedition of 1885 (Suakin); and was employed in the Signalling Department; reconnaissance to Hasheen; actions at Hasheen and Tofrek; operations at and destruction of Tamai. Despatches [London Gazette, 25 Aug. 1885]; two clasps. He served in the Sudan, 1885–86; with the Frontier Field Force, and was employed in the Signalling Department at Kosheh, and in the action at Ginniss; was mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "Elmhirst Rhodes, Capt., Royal Berkshire Regt. For action of Ginniss." The Insignia of the Order were presented to Capt. Rhodes by Queen Victoria. He became Major 30 Aug. 1893. Major Rhodes served from 1899 to 1900 as Director of Signalling to the South African Field Force. Afterwards as Station Commandant. He was present in the advance on Kimberley, including the actions at Belmont, Enslin, Modder River and Magersfontein. Operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900, including operations at Paardeberg (17 to 26 Feb.); actions at Poplar Grove and Dreifontein. Operations in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, July to Nov. 1900. Operations in the Transvaal, west of Pretoria, July and Aug. 1900, including actions at Zilikat's Nek (slightly wounded). Operations in Orange River Colony, May to July, 1900. Operations in the Transvaal, Nov. 1900, to July, 1901. Operations in Capt Colony, July, 1901, to 31 May, 1902. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 26 Jan. 1900, and 7 May and 10 Sept. 1901], and received the Queen's Medal with five clasps, and the King's Medal with two clasps. He retired 3 Oct. 1903.

FERRIER, JAMES ARCHIBALD, Capt., was born 25 March, 1854, at Malacca, Straits Settlements, son of Major Ilay Ferrier, of Belsyde, Linlithgowshire, and of Catherine Maria, daughter of E. de Wind, Esq. He was educated at St. James's Collegiate School, Jersey, and at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich; was gazetted to the Royal Engineers on 9 Jan. 1873, and joined the Royal Engineers 15 Sept. 1873, as Lieutenant. He served in the Afghan War, 1878–80 (Medal). In 1884–85 he served in the Sudan Expedition (Nile), and received the Sudan Medal with Nile clasp, and the Khedive's Bronze Star. He was promoted to Captain 8 Jan. 1885, and again saw active service in the Sudan in 1885–86, with the Frontier Field Force. He was specially mentioned, War Office letter, Royal Engineers, No. 7700/4106, dated H.Q., W.O., 2 April, 1886, for his services when commanding the defence of Ambigole Wells, in Dec. 1885, against an incursion of Dervishes, who destroyed two and a half miles of the railway between Wady Halfa and the advanced base at Akasheh. He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "James Archibald Ferrier, Capt., Royal Engineers. For the action at Ginniss." The Insignia were presented to him by Her Majesty Queen Victoria. He was mentioned in Despatches for the action of Ginniss. From 1888 to 1892 Capt. Ferrier was Adjutant, Royal Engineers. He was promoted to Major 3 May, 1892. Major Ferrier served in the Tirah Campaign, 1897–98, as Field Engineer, 1st Division, and afterwards on the Staff as Brigade Major. He was present at the capture of the Sampagha and Arhanga Passes, and in the operations against the Khani Khel Chamkanis, and in the operations in the Bazar Valley 25 to 30 Dec. 1897. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 5 April, 1898]; was given the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 20 May, 1898, and received the Medal with two clasps. From 1899 to 1903, he commanded the Training Battn. Royal Engineers; and from 1903 to 1904, was C.R.E., Natal, and in charge of Intelligence. He commanded troops in Natal, April to Aug. 1904. From 1905 to 1908 he was Chief Engineer, Eastern Coast Defences; and he was created a C.B. in 1907. He was Commandant, S.M.E., Chatham, 1908 to 1910, and was promoted to Major-General 5 June, 1910. From 1911 to 1914, he commanded the troops on the West Coast of Africa. In the European War General Ferrier was Garrison Commander (Coast Defences) 5 May, 1915, to 16 Feb. 1917. His services were acknowledged in the London Gazette of 24 Feb. 1917.

He retired 17 Feb. 1918. On 1 Nov. 1887, at Watford, Herts, General Ferrier married Louisa Emily, second daughter of J. F. Watkins, J.P. for Herts, and of Annie McMaster Shaw (Watkins), and their children are: Ilay Ferrier, born 28 April, 1889, Captain, Indian Army; Tyrrell Ferrier, born 2 May, 1890, Captain, A.O.D., Inspector of Ordnance Machinery, and Alan Ferrier, M.C., born 26 May, 1894, Captain, Royal Engineers.

DAUBENEY, EDWARD KAYE, Capt., was born 3 May, 1858, son of the Rev. T. Daubeney, of Eastington, Cirencester. He was educated at Wellington, joined the Army 11 May, 1878, and served in the 80th Foot through the Sekukuni Campaign of 1878 and the Zulu War of 1879, being present at Ulundi (South African Medal and clasp for 1878–79). He became Lieutenant, South Staffordshire Regt., 1 Dec. 1880. In 1884–85 he served in the Nile Expedition, with the Egyptian Army (Egyptian Medal with clasp for the Nile and Khedive's Bronze Star). He was promoted to Captain 7 Aug. 1886, and again saw active service in the Sudan in 1886, as A.D.C. to the Brigadier-General commanding the Nile Frontier Force, Egypt, and was present at the action of Ginniss. He was mentioned in Despatches and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "Edward Kaye Daubeney, Capt., South Staffordshire Regt. For Action at Ginniss." Capt. Daubeney had been employed with the Egyptian Army from 28 Feb. 1884, to 30 Oct. 1885. He was promoted to Major, 18 Nov. 1896, and was Adjutant, Militia, 21 Jan. 1896, to 20 Jan. 1901. He became Lieutenant-Colonel 16 Oct. 1903, and was given the Brevet of Colonel 16 Oct. 1906, becoming substantive Colonel 4 July, 1908. Colonel Daubeney served in the European War from 1914, as temporary Brigadier-General commanding the Gloucestershire and Worcestershire Brigade. From 1915 he commanded the Warwickshire (Infantry) Brigade, and from 1916 the Reserve Highland Brigade. He retired with the rank of Brigadier-General in 1918. He was awarded the C.B.E. in 1919. He married Eileen Gertrude, daughter of Sir P. Fitzgerald, Bart., 19th Knight of Kerry, and they have one son.

BORROW, FREDERICK RONALD, Capt., joined the 81st Foot 8 Dec. 1877; served with his regiment in the Afghan War of 1878–79, and was present at the capture of Ali Masjid (Medal and clasp). He became Lieutenant 6 March, 1880, and again saw active service in the Nile Expedition of 1884–85, in the Egyptian Army (Medal with clasp and Khedive's Star). Also served in the operations of the Sudan Frontier Force in 1885–87, including the investment of Kosheh and the engagements at Ginniss and Sarras. He was mentioned in Despatches, received the 4th Class of the Osmanieh, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "Frederick Ronald Borrow, Capt., North Lancashire Regt. For the Action at Ginniss." He had been promoted to Captain 28 March, 1886. He was mentioned again in Despatches for the action at Sarras, and received the 3rd Class of the Medjidie. A further account of Capt. Borrow's services is given in this book in the account of Sir Leslie Rundle. Capt. Borrow died at Winchester 11 Dec. 1892.

ROMILLY, FREDERICK WILLIAM, Lieut., was born at Edinburgh, 22 July, 1854, second son of the late Lieut.-Colonel Romilly (who died in 1887; he was a brother of the 1st Baron Romilly) and of Lady Elizabeth, daughter of the 2nd Earl of Minto (she died in 1892). He was educated privately, and at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and passed first in the examination for a direct commission in the Army, 1892, entering the Scots Fusilier Guards, 30 April, 1873, as Lieutenant. He served in the Egyptian Expedition of 1882–84, and was present at the action at Mahuta and at the Battle of Tel-el-Kebir, receiving the Medal with clasp and the Bronze Star. He was A.D.C. to the General Commanding in Egypt, 18 May, 1883, to 31 Dec. 1887, and, as A.D.C. to the General Commanding, was present at the battles of El Teb and Tamai. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 6 May, 1884], and received two clasps. He served in the Guards' Camel Regt. in the Nile Expedition of 1884–85, and was present at the battles of Abu Klea and Gubat, and at the action near Metammeh (two clasps). In the Sudan in 1885–86 he served in the Egyptian Frontier Campaign, as A.D.C. to the General Officer Commanding, and was present at the action of Ginniss, and was mentioned in the Despatch of General Sir F. Stephenson, G.C.B., dated 2 Jan. 1886 [London Gazette, 9 Feb. 1886]: "As regards my own personal Staff, I venture to bring to your notice Major Gordon Money and Lieut. Romilly, Scots Guards. The latter, by his intelligence, professional acquirements and intimate knowledge of Soudanese warfare (this being his third campaign against the Soudanese), proved himself an excellent A.D.C. To both these officers I am indebted for much valuable assistance during the time they have been on my staff, and especially since I have taken the field." Lieut. Romilly received the 4th Class Medjidie, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "Frederick William Romilly, Lieut., Scots Guards. For Action at Ginniss.' He became Captain 1 April, 1887; was given the Brevet of Major 1 Jan. 1888, and was D.A.A.G., Malta, 23 Oct. 1890, to 22 Oct. 1893; was promoted to Major 12 Dec. 1894, and was Military Secretary to the Governor of Madras 18 March, 1896, to 23 Nov. 1898. He became Lieutenant-Colonel, Scots Guards, 1 April, 1900. Lieut.-Colonel Romilly served in the South African War from 1900 to 1902. He obtained command of the 2nd Battalion on arrival in South Africa, was wounded at Biddulphsberg 29 May, 1900, and commanded several mobile columns. He was selected by Sir A. Hunter to make the night assault on the "Slaapkranz" position, with his battalion, which successfully achieved the biggest surrender of the war, viz., that of Prinsloo and 5,000 Boers (1901). He was selected with his battalion to safeguard their present Majesties during their visit to Natal, just before Louis Botha's raid south. In Sept. 1901, he ran a blockhouse line from Potchefstroom across the Vaal River. In Oct. 1901, he ran a blockhouse line by Piet Retief to the Swazi border, and occupied same till the end of the war. He was wounded, mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 16 April, 1901], received the Queen's Medal with three clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a C.B. He was given the Brevet of Colonel 10 Feb. 1904, and commanded the Scots Guards and Regimental District from 23 Sept. 1905, on which date he became substantive Colonel, until 9 Oct. 1909. In 1908 he was created a C.V.O., and on 22 July, 1911, he retired under the age limit. On mobilization in 1914, he became A.Q.M.G., 2nd Army, Central Force, which appointment he held until 12 March, 1916, and he was A.Q.M.G., Southern Army, Home Defence, up to 31 Aug. 1917, and was then appointed a Munition Area Inspector under the Ministry of Munitions, and so acted till March, 1919. Colonel Romilly married, on 27 Oct. 1891, at the Guards' Chapel, Wellington Barracks, Gwendoline Powys, daughter of the late Arthur Pratt Barlow and widow of Charles Russell Hole, Esq. He studied at the Slade School of Art, under Sir Edward Poynter. For nearly all its first five years he was Honorary Secretary and Treasurer of the Sporting Club in Cairo, and initiated nearly all its present attractions, and while in India he was President of the Ootacamund Hunt.

Frederick W. Romilly.

MAXWELL, JOHN GRENFELL, Lieut., was born 12 July, 1859, son of Robert Maxwell; was educated at Cheltenham College; gazetted to the 42nd Highlanders on 22 March, 1879; and became Lieutenant, Royal Highlanders, 1 July, 1881. He served in the Egyptian War of 1882, with the 1st Battn. Black Watch, and was present at the Battle of Tel-el-Kebir (Medal with clasp, Khedive's Bronze Star). He was Staff Captain, Military Police, Egypt, from 18 June, 1883, to July, 1883. Lieut. Maxwell served in the Sudan Expedition, 1884–85 (Nile), as Headquarters Commandant and Provost-Marshal, and employed in the Intelligence Department; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 25 Aug. 1885] (clasp). He served in the Sudan Expedition of 1885–86, as A.D.C. to General Grenfell, was present at the action of Ginniss, was mentioned in Despatches, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "John Grenfell Maxwell, Lieut., Royal Highlanders. For Action at Ginniss." He was present at the action of Gemaizah, also as A.D.C. to the General Officer Commanding, was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 11 Jan. 1889], received the 4th Class Osmanieh, and a clasp. He was present at the Action of Toski, was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 6 Sept. 1889] (Brevet of Major and clasp). He had been employed with the Egyptian Army 7 Sept. 1886, to 14 Sept. 1887, as A.D.C. to the Sirdar. He was promoted to Captain, 28 Sept. 1887. In 1896 he took part in the expedition to Dongola, commanding the 3rd Egyptian Brigade, and was present at the operations of 7 June and 19 Sept. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 3 Nov. 1896], and was appointed Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel on 18 Nov. 1896, and received the Egyptian Medal with two clasps. For his services in the Nile Expedition of 1897 he was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 25 Jan. 1898], and received a clasp to the Egyptian Medal. He was again employed with the Egyptian Army, 15 Sept. 1897, to 12 Feb. 1900, as A.D.C. and A.M.S. to the Sirdar. In the Nile Expedition of 1898 he commanded the 2nd Sudanese Brigade in the battles of the Atbara and Khartoum. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 24 May, 1898, and 30 Sept. 1898], appointed Brevet Colonel 16 Nov. 1898, thanked by both Houses of Parliament, received a Medal and two clasps to the Egyptian Medal. He was on special service in South Africa from 10 April, 1900, to 25 Sept. 1902, as Major-General Commanding the 14th Brigade, 7th Division (1901); Military Governor of Pretoria, 1901–02; G.O.C., North-West Transvaal, 1902. He took part in the operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900, including operations at Vet River (5th and 6th May) and Zand River. Operations in the Transvaal in May and June, 1900, including actions near Johannesburg and Pretoria. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 16 April, 1901, and 29 July, 1902], received the Queen's Medal with three clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, was created a K.C.B. and a C.M.G. Sir John Maxwell was Chief Staff Officer (Brigadier-General on Staff), 3rd Army Corps, Ireland, 7 Nov. 1902, to 15 May, 1904; and was created a C.V.O.; and was Staff Officer to the Inspector-General of the Forces, 16 May, 1904, to 20 Dec. 1907. Major-General 1 Dec. 1906; General 3 June, 1919; was Chief Staff Officer, General Staff, Mediterranean, 21 Dec. 1907, to 3 Sept. 1908. From 4 Sept. 1908, to 19 Nov. 1912, he was G.O.C., Egypt; and he was promoted to Lieutenant-General 4 Sept. 1912. Sir John Maxwell was on Special Service in the European War, as Chief Liaison Officer with the French Army, 4 Aug. 1914, to Sept. 1914, and was G.O.C. in Egypt, Sept. 1914, to March, 1916. He was G.O.C.-in-C., Ireland, April, 1916, to Nov. 1916, when he was appointed G.O.C.-in-C. Northern Command, until 31 May, 1919. Sir John Maxwell has the Grand Cross of the Order of the Legion of Honour (France); 1st Class Order of the Nile (Egypt); White Eagle (Russia); Crown of Italy; Charles III. (Spain). He was created a G.C.B., 1917; and a K.C.M.G., 1916. He married in 1892, Louise Selina, only daughter of the late C. W. Bonynge, of 42, Prince's Gate, London, S.W., and they have one daughter, married 1 July, 1919, to Lieut. Clifford Carver, of Locust Valley, Long Island, U.S.A.

Mr. W. T. Massey, in "The Desert Campaigns" (published by Messrs. Constable in 1918), gives some account of General Maxwell's work in Egypt: "I arrived in Egypt when the concern of officials had been greatly lessened by the improvement in the outlook. I saw the first 30,000 Australian and New Zealand troops to take part in the war set foot in Egypt, and their physique and 'stand-no-nonsense' attitude greatly impressed the people with the fact that we were determined to go through with the war, and that the Mother-country had a mighty reserve in Britons overseas. Though there were undercurrents, more or less strong, when the Turks got to the Canal early in the following year, and when the Grand Sheikh of the Senussi became an open enemy, the Egyptian people from an uncertain quantity became well in hand. For this the Empire had to thank the officials of the Residency, and perhaps more particularly General Maxwell, commanding the forces in Egypt, whose policy, firm and just, was based on a deep knowledge of the Egyptian character, and was framed to serve our highest interests at a point which, at the time, was not an over strong link in the Imperial chain. Sir John Maxwell's initial success had an important bearing on future events, and his work, sterling as it was held to be at the time, will be even more highly appraised as the years roll on. We have not always been so fortunate in the choice of our administrators in Egypt. On the Young Turk Party arriving at a decision which spelt ruin for Turkey, it became vitally necessary to prepare for the defence of the Suez Canal. At all costs that highway connecting the seas and countries of East and West must be kept open, and it was just as much the concern of neutrals as of the Allies that no enemy hand should grasp it. . . We took the Canal defences in hand in Nov., although a strong military element believed no serious attempt to get to the Canal would ever be made. I confess their arguments at the time convinced me of the impossibility of an advance to the Canal by any substantial body, but subsequent events proved that given resources and men the desert of Sinai can be crossed by armies just as it was by Napoleon, by Mohammed Ali and by the warriors of the ancient kings. General Maxwell accepted a scheme prepared by Sir Murdoch Macdonald, Under-Secretary for Public Works in Egypt, an engineer who has planned nearly all the improvements effected in the country since the Assouan Dam was opened, in the building of which he had taken a very responsible part. East of the northern end of the Canal to beyond Pelusium the desert is below the level of the sea. It was decided to flood this area, but, instead of opening a channel through the low sand dunes on the shore, Sir Murdoch proposed that the Canal bank should be cut in a few places to flood many miles of the desert, so as to make a water defence to the Canal for some eighteen or twenty miles of its length. This was a comparatively simple matter in expert hands, and, at the cost of a few thousand sandbags and some cheap labour, many troops were spared for other sections which could not be so readily defended. This reduced the line of front to between sixty or seventy miles, and of this length the Bitter Lakes should be omitted, because naval patrol launches took over the duty of guarding them. A few defence posts were built and entrenched on the east bank to cover certain ferries, but the main defences in the early days were on the west bank, and consisted of trenches from which attempts to cross the water could be repelled. The railway and the Sweet Water Canal, which brought Nile water to the labourers who excavated the Suez Canal, and was now utilized to supply the drinking water for our troops, were protected, and armoured and other trains were kept at strategic points for the movements of troops. . . . General Maxwell had to find new troops for the Canal zone. There were plenty available. On the Canal were battalions of Indian regulars and regiments of Imperial Service troops. They were very good, and it went hard with anyone who met a patrol and did not know the password."

We quote some passages from G. W. Steevens's account of the battles of the Atbara and of Omdurman ("With Kitchener to Khartum," page 58 and following pages): "The Second Brigade consisted of three Sudanese battalions and one Egyptian, the 12th, 13th and 14th Sudanese (Townshend, Collinson and Shekleton Beys), and the 8th Egyptian under Kiloussi Bey, a soldierly old Turk who went through the Russo-Turkish War. Lieut.-Colonel Maxwell commanded it—an officer who has served in the Egyptian Army through all its successes; big, masterful, keen and reputed an especially able administrator, he is but just entering middle age, and ought to have a brilliant career before him. This brigade was quartered at Assillem, about half-way between Berber and the Atbara." Mr. Steevens says that in the Battle of the Atbara only the generals were allowed to ride or the casualties would have been greater. "Generals Hunter, Macdonald and Maxwell all rode over the trenches at the head of their men. The Second Brigade condescended to a mere four miles an hour, and 'By George! you know,' said the Bey, 'they're lovely; they're rippers. I've seen Sikhs and I've seen Gurkhas, and these are good enough for me. This has been the happiest day of my life. I wasn't happier the day I got the D.S.O. than I've been to-day.'" In describing the Battle of Omdurman Mr. Steevens wrote: "Our camp for the night of 1 Sept. was in the village of Agaiga, a mile south of Herreri Hill. On our left front was another hill, higher but single-peaked and rounder—Gebel Surgham. In front the ground was open for five miles or so—sand and grass broken only by a few folds—with a group of hills beyond. The force had formed up in position in the afternoon, when the Dervishes had followed the cavalry home, and had remained under arms all night. At half-past five in the morning, when the first howitzer shell from opposite Omdurman opened the day's work, every man was in his place. The line formed an obtuse angle; the order of brigades and battalions, counting from the left, was the following: Lyttelton's 2nd British (Rifle Brigade, Lancashire Fusiliers, Northumberland Fusiliers, Grenadier Guards), Wauchope's 1st British (Warwicks, Seaforths, Camerons, Lincolns); Maxwell's 2nd Egyptian (14th, 12th, 13th Sudanese, and 8th Egyptian) in support. Here came the point of the angle; to the right of it were Macdonald's 1st Egyptian (11th, 10th, 9th Sudanese, 2nd Egyptian supporting); Lewis's 3rd Egyptian (4th, 15th and 3rd and 7th Egyptian, in column on the right flank). Collinson's 4th Egyptian Brigade (1st, 5th, 17th and 18th Egyptian) was in reserve in the village. All the Egyptian battalions in the front were in their usual formation, with four companies in line and two in support. The British had six in line and two in support. On the extreme left were the 32nd Field Battery; the Maxims and Egyptian field-guns were mounted at intervals in the infantry line. The cavalry had gone out at the first streak of grey, British on the left, as usual, Egyptians with camel corps and horse battery from the right, moving across our front. The gunboats lay with steam up off the village. Light stole quietly into the sky behind us. There was no sound from the plain or the hills before us; there was hardly a sound from our own line. Everybody was very silent but very curious. Would they be so mad as to come out and run their heads into our fire? It seemed beyond hoping for; yet certainly they had been full of war the day before. But most of us were expecting instantly the order to advance on Omdurman. A trooper rose out of the dimness from behind the shoulder of Gebel Surgham, grew larger and plainer, spurred violently up to the line and inside. A couple more were silhouetted across our front. Then the electric whisper came racing down the line; they were coming. The Lancers came in on the left; the Egyptian mounted troops drew like a curtain across us from left to right. As they passed a flicker of white flags began to extend and fill up the front in their place. The noise of something began to creep in upon us; it cleared and divided into the tap of drums and the far-away surf of raucous war-cries. A shiver of expectancy thrilled along our army, and then a sigh of content. They were coming on, Allah help them! They were coming on. It was now half-past six. The flags seemed still very distant, the roar very faint, and the thud of our first guns was almost startling. It may have startled them too, but it startled them into life. The line of flags swung forward, and a mass of flying white linen swung forward with it too. They came very fast, and they came very straight; and then presently they came no further. With a crash the bullets leaped out of the British rifles. It began with the Guards and Warwicks—section volleys at 2,000 yards, then, as the Dervishes edged rightward, it ran along to the Highlanders, the Lincolns and to Maxwell's Brigade. The British stood up in double rank behind their zariba; the blacks lay down in their shelter-trench. Both poured out death as fast as they could load and press trigger. Shrapnel whistled and Maxims growled savagely. From all the line came perpetual fire, fire, fire, and shrieked forth in great gusts of destruction. And the enemy? No white troops would have faced that torrent of death for five minutes, but the Baggara and the blacks came on. The torrent swept into them and hurled them down in whole companies. You saw a rigid line gather itself up and rush on evenly; then, before a shrapnel shell or a Maxim, the line suddenly quivered and stopped. The line was yet unbroken, but it was quite still. But other lines gathered up, again, again and yet again; they went down, and yet others rushed on. . . . It was the last day of Mahdism and the greatest. They could never get near and yet they refused to hold back. . . . It was not a battle but an execution. . . . Only by now—small wonder—they were not coming on. They were not driven back; they were all killed in coming on. . . . We waited half an hour or so and then the sudden bugle called us to our feet. 'Advance,' it cried—'to Omdurman,' added we. Slowly the force broke up and expanded. The evident intention was to march in echelon of brigades—the Second British leading along the river, the First British on their right rear, then Maxwell's, Lewis's and Macdonald's, with Collinson's still supporting. . . . Movement was slow . . . We passed over a corner of the field of fire and saw for certain what awful slaughter we had done. It was now twenty minutes to ten. The British had crested a low ridge between Gebel Surgham and the Nile. Maxwell's brigade was just ascending it, Lewis's just coming up under the hill. . . . Suddenly from rearward broke out a heavy crackle of fire. . . . The crackle became a crashing, and the crashing waxed to a roar. Dervishes were firing at us from the top of Gebel Surgham, Dervishes were firing behind and to the right of it. . . . What was it? Had they come to life again? No time to ask; reinforcements or ghosts, they were on us, and the battle was begun again." Mr. Steevens next describes the doings of Broadwood's force, and the charge of the 21st Lancers: "When the Sirdar moved his brigades southward," he continues, "he knew what he was doing. He was giving his right to an unbeaten enemy; with his usual daring he made it so. His game now was to get between the Dervishes and Omdurman. . . . The blacks of the 13th Battn. were storming Gebel Surgham; Lewis and Macdonald, facing west and south, had formed a right angle. They were receiving the fire of the Khalifa's division and the charge of the Khalifa's horsemen; behind them the Khalifa's huge black standard flapped ravenlike. The Baggara horsemen were few and ill-mounted—perhaps 200 altogether—but they rode to get home or die. They died. . . . A second time the attack guttered and flickered out. It was just past ten. Once more to Omdurman! Two minutes' silence. Then once more the howling storm rushed down upon us; once more crashed forth the answering tempest." Then Steevens describes the battle as only he could describe it. "Hunter sent for Wauchope's first British Brigade to fill the gap between Macdonald and Lewis. The order went to General Gatacre first, instead of to the Sirdar. With the soldier's instinct he set the brigade moving on the instant. . . . The cockpit of the fighting was Macdonald's." And after the Battle was won, Steevens says: "And the Dervishes? The honour of the fight must still go with the men who died. Our men were perfect, but the Dervishes were superb—beyond perfection. It was their largest, best and bravest army that ever fought against us for Mahdism, and it died worthy of the huge empire that Mahdism kept so long."

Henry de B. de Lisle.

DE LISLE, HENRY DE BEAUVOIR, Lieut., was born 27 July, 1864 son of the late Richard V. de Lisle, Esq., of Guernsey, and of his wife, C. E. de Lisle. He was educated in Jersey, and joined the Durham Light Infantry at Gibraltar, as Lieutenant, 10 March, 1883. He served in the Sudan in 1885 and 1886, with the Frontier Field Force, being employed with the Mounted Infantry. He was mentioned in Despatches and awarded the D.S.O. for his services at the Battle of Ginniss, and for special service connected with the attack on the fort at Ambigole Wells by Arabs. He carried Despatches unto the beleaguered fort at Ambigole Wells, south of Wady Halfa, Egypt, and broke out with two men with news that—for want of ammunition and water—the fort could not hold out for more than 24 hours. It was relieved the next morning. His D.S.O. was gazetted 26 Nov. 1886: "Henry de Beauvoir de Lisle, Lieut., Durham Light Infantry. For Action at Ginniss." He became Captain 1 Oct. 1891, and was Adjutant, Durham Light Infantry, 1 July, 1892, to 30 June, 1896. For ten years he was Captain of the Durham Light Infantry Polo team. Captain de Lisle passed the Staff College in 1899. He served in South Africa from the beginning of the war in 1899 to the end, on the Staff (including command of a Mounted Infantry Battalion, of 2nd Mounted Infantry Corps, of mobile column, of Cavalry Brigade (temporary), and of Australian Commonwealth Brigade). He raised and commanded the 6th Mounted Infantry, and an independent column of Mounted Infantry, from 1 June, 1900, to 14 Aug. 1902. He was present at the Relief of Kimberley. Operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900, including operations at Paardeberg (17 to 26 Feb.); actions at Poplar Grove, Karee Siding, Houtnek (Thoba Mountain), Vet River (5 and 6 May), and Zand River. Operations in the Transvaal, actions near Johannesburg, Pretoria and Diamond Hill; operations west of Pretoria (Venterskroon), severely wounded (14 Aug.). Operations in Orange River Colony (May to Aug., and Sept. to Nov. 1900), including actions at Wittebergen (1 to 29 July), and Bothaville. Operations in Cape Colony, south of Orange River, 1899–1900, including actions at Colesberg (1 Jan. to 12 Feb.). Operations in the Transvaal, Orange River Colony, and Cape Colony, 30 Nov. 1900, to 31 May, 1902. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 4 May, 1900, 8 Feb. and 16 April, 1901, and 29 July, 1902]; was given the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 2 Jan. 1902; received the Queen's Medal with five clasps, and the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a C.B. He had become Major, Durham Light Infantry, 1 Jan. 1902; 5th Dragoon Guards, 22 Oct. 1902, and 1st Royal Dragoons, 19 Dec. 1903; and Lieutenant-Colonel 2 Feb. 1906. He was given the Brevet of Colonel 22 Aug. 1906, and commanded the 1st Royal Dragoons from 1906 to 1910. He was promoted to Colonel 2 Feb. 1910. From 1 March, 1910, to 4 Aug. 1911, he was G.S.O., 1st Grade, 2nd Division, Aldershot Command; and he was Brigade Commander, 2nd Cavalry Brigade, from 5 Aug. 1911, to 9 Oct. 1914. He served in the European War from 1914, as temporary Major-General from 10 Oct. 1914, to 17 Feb. 1915; and became Major-General on 18 Feb. 1915. He commanded the 2nd Cavalry Brigade, 1st Cavalry Division, from 10 Oct. 1914; the 29th Division from 4 June, 1915; the 13th Corps from 12 March, 1918; and the 15th Corps from 10 April to the end of the war. He was promoted Major-General for services in the field, and created a K.C.B. 1 Jan. 1917; promoted Lieutenant-General 1 Jan. 1919, and created K.C.M.G. June, 1919; was created Commander of the Legion of Honour, 1918; Grand Officer, Order of Leopold, 1919, and Grand Cross, White Eagle of Serbia, 1919. Sir Beauvoir de Lisle married in 1902, Leila, daughter of the late Wilberforce Bryant, of Stoke Park, Stoke Poges, Bucks, and they have one son.

From time to time in the histories of the South African War we get glimpses of De Lisle and his wild horsemen scaling impossible places, achieving wonderful feats of arms. One cannot tell all the tale of them, but these short extracts may form a fitting end to this all too brief notice of De Lisle: There is a fascinating description of the operations at Houtnek (Thoba Mountain) in the official "History of the War in South Africa" (pages 328–332), compiled by General Sir F. Maurice, K.C.B., and published by Messrs. Hurst and Blackett, which may not be out of place at the close of this brief account of the career of Sir Beauvoir de Lisle: "At daybreak on 30 April Ian Hamilton set his troops in motion towards Winburg, where the Commander-in-Chief desired him to arrive on the 5th of May. His column consisted of Smith-Dorrien's infantry brigade (19th), Ridley's brigade of three mounted infantry corps, and two batteries of artillery. For some hours the enemy made no sign, but at 8.30 a.m. the mounted infantry, which formed the right flank guard, came under the distant fire of guns and pom-poms posted on a range of hills four or five miles in length, which crosses the Winburg road from west to east and then turns sharply to the south. The right of the Boer position rested on the most western hill, a high flat-topped kopje, named Thoba Mountain; the centre occupied a series of sharp rocky knolls which stretch about three miles eastwards from Thoba; the left held the kopjes which run from north to south. In front of the centre of the position is a bare shallow valley, about two thousand yards in width. The Winburg road crosses Houtnek between Thoba Mountain and the sharp, rocky knolls; it is dominated in every direction by these heights. The officers commanding the advanced troops at once took measures for the safety of the column. Bainbridge, with the 7th Mounted Infantry, kept the enemy on the right flank and right rear. De Lisle led the 6th Mounted Infantry and the New Zealanders at a gallop to the southern edge of the broad valley and occupied it. Major N. Legge, 20th Hussars, who with Kitchener's Horse was on the left front, noticed that Thoba Mountain was but lightly held, and instantly directed his corps against it. These various movements, made on the initiative of the officers commanding units, exactly anticipated the orders issued by Major-General Hamilton. After reconnoitring the ground, Hamilton realized that a frontal attack on such a position, especially as it was strengthened with well-placed stone breastworks, was impossible. Equally impossible did it seem to turn it by the east. He therefore determined to seize Thoba Mountain, and then, passing his mounted troops round its western flank, to assail the enemy from the rear. During the time occupied in the reconnaissance, Smith-Dorrien, dropping the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry as rear and baggage guard, had reinforced de Lisle. As soon as Hamilton was satisfied that Kitchener's Horse had made good their footing on Thoba Mountain, he ordered the 19th Brigade to support them. Smith-Dorrien, leaving himself only six companies of the Shropshire Light Infantry to hold the southern edge of the valley sent the remainder of the Shropshire, the Gordon Highlanders, and the Royal Canadian regiment against Thoba Mountain. As they marched in the open across the enemy's front these troops came under heavy artillery fire; but it was remarkable that though the shells fell fast among their ranks, only one man was killed, though many were knocked down by the explosions, stunned, or slightly injured. As soon as the Boers saw that Thoba was threatened, they began to reinforce the burghers on the mountain, and before long they had become so strong there that the 19th Brigade could gain no further ground. About 2 p.m. the enemy began to take the offensive, and advanced in several lines from the northern end of the mountain to thrust back those of the British who had reached the southern crest. So regular were the formations, so soldierly the bearing of these men—European adventurers who had served in the armies of their own countries—that it was hard to believe they were not British troops. Until the General through a telescope saw that each time they raised their rifles to their shoulder they pointed them to the south, he refused to allow his artillery to play upon them. Though the shells seemed to burst accurately over them, about 150 of the enemy pushed steadily forward towards a knoll, to which Capt. E. B. Towse, Gordon Highlanders, was leading a dozen of his men and a handful of Kitchener's Horse. Owing to the lie of the ground neither side could see the movements of the other until they were little more than fifty yards apart. Then Towse caught sight of the foe, dashed forward, and opened a very rapid fire. The surprise was complete, and the enemy recoiled before him, just as he fell to the earth, struck by a bullet which totally destroyed his sight. The success of this unexpected stroke was great, for it enabled Ian Hamilton to keep his hold upon the southern crest of the mountain, though he was unable to make headway across the plateau on the summit. For his gallantry and initiative on this occasion Capt. Towse was awarded the Victoria Cross. To prevent further Boer reinforcements reaching Thoba, Smith-Dorrien and de Lisle kept up a hot fusillade against the centre of the enemy's position. In this they were successful, but the burghers, seeing that their comrades had not been driven from the mountain, took heart and gathered in threatening masses upon the right flank and right rear of Smith-Dorrien, and from the kopjes running north and south hotly engaged the mounted infantry and shelled the transport and the rearguard which escorted it. Until darkness put an end to the combat the situation remained unchanged. Then the General ordered that every man should stay during the night on the ground he had occupied by the day, in readiness to resume the battle at earliest dawn; and as his mounted infantry were so fully employed in holding back the enemy that none were available for the turning of Thoba Mountain, which was essential to the success of his plan, he called upon Lieut.-General French at Thabanchu for assistance. At daylight on 1 May firing began all along the line, and Smith-Dorrien renewed his efforts to possess himself of Thoba Mountain. Fortunately the enemy was slow in reinforcing its defenders, and the knolls on its western crest were gradually overrun by detachments of Gordon Highlanders, Canadians and Shropshire Light Infantry. A half-company of the latter, well handled by their colour-sergeant, Scowse, worked their way across part of the plateau and maintained their position under a heavy cross-fire, which killed or wounded twenty-five per cent. of their numbers. Lower down the western slopes the Victorian Mounted Infantry, under Major K. E. Lean, did useful work in co-operation with these movements. In the course of the morning Lieut.-Colonel P. L. Clowes, 8th Hussars, arrived from Thabanchu with reinforcements consisting of his own regiment, a composite Lancer regiment, the East Yorkshire and a field battery. The guns and the infantry were sent off to strengthen the right rear, which at the time was very hard pressed, while Clowes, with his mounted men and Hamilton's Horse battery, was directed to move eastward, if possible circle right round Thoba, and threaten the enemy from the rear. At about 10 a.m. some of the Boer guns, after shelling the summit of Thoba with great vigour for nearly an hour, began to retire; but this movement by no means heralded a general retreat, for the fire on the right rear between Bainbridge's Mounted Infantry and the Boers continued to be heavy, and the burghers on Thoba held its northern crest with great tenacity. About noon the 21st Infantry Brigade (Bruce Hamilton) and the 2nd Cavalry Brigade (Broadwood) could be seen about five miles away on the plain to the north and west of Thoba. Smith-Dorrien, who, since early morning had watched the combat from the southern crest, saw that the time had come to sweep the enemy off the top of Thoba, and thus, by securing the nek, enable the troops and baggage to cross it in broad daylight. He therefore arranged for a general advance across the plateau, so as to drive the Boers from it, and then to rake with musketry the centre of their position. A line of the Shropshire Light Infantry and the Gordon Highlanders dashed forward by rushes under a heavy fusillade from the northern edge, and when the troops charged, the Boers broke into headlong flight. The pressure of Broadwood's and Bruce Hamilton's advance in the north-west and of Clowes' turning movement round the mountain had already made themselves felt, and when Thoba was lost, the Boers abandoned the whole of their position, and retired towards Clocolan. By 3.30 all the transport was safely through the nek, at the northern end of which Colonel Clowes, having completely circled Thoba Mountain after a sharp encounter, had halted. Ian Hamilton marched on that afternoon to Jacobsrust, where he was joined by Broadwood's and Bruce Hamilton's brigades." Sir Conan Doyle tells us in "The Great Boer War," when describing the Colesberg operations, how "De Lisle with his mounted infantry carried the position which they had originally held. In this successful and well-managed action the Boer loss was ninety, and we took, in addition, twenty-one prisoners." Again, "at Diamond Hill the temptation to an assault was great, but even now it might mean heavy loss of life, and Hamilton shrank from the sacrifice. In the morning his judgment was justified, for Botha had abandoned the position, and his army was in full retreat. The mounted men followed as far as Elands River Station, which is twenty-five miles from Pretoria; but the enemy were not overtaken, save by a small body of De Lisle's Australians and Regular Mounted Infantry. This force, less than a hundred in number, gained a kopje which overlooked a portion of the Boer Army. Had they been more numerous the effect would have been incalculable. As it was, the Australians fired every cartridge which they possessed into the throng, and killed many horses and men." In an engagement on 27 Oct., during the pursuit of De Wet, "the Boers were . . . outflanked by the extension of the British line, and were forced to fall back. At half-past eight De Lisle, whose force had trotted and galloped for twelve miles, arrived with several companies of Australians, and the success of the day was assured." In the second invasion of Cape Colony: "On 6 Feb., after a fine march, De Lisle and his men took possession of Calvinia, which had been abandoned by the Boers. . . . De Lisle hardly halted at Calvinia, but pushed on towards Williston, covering seventy-two miles of broken country in forty-eight hours, one of the most amazing performances of the war." And a little later: "De Lisle, who had passed over five hundred miles of barren country since he advanced from Piquetburg, made for the railway at Victoria West, and was dispatched from that place on 22 Feb. to the scene of action in the north." In the skirmish near the hamlet of Reitz on 6 June: "For four hours the battle raged, until at last the parched and powder-stained survivors breathed a prayer of thanks as they saw upon the southern horizon the vanguard of De Lisle riding furiously to the rescue." And then at the end of the march to Pretoria one reads in the "Official History" that: "Hamilton, who had early ridden to the front, had at once perceived the weakness of the Boer right, and the possibility of outflanking it. Broadwood, with the cavalry, carrying out the original plan, were by this time circling widely toward the west. But the mounted infantry under Colonel de Lisle were at hand, and with them Hamilton decided to effect his purpose. To the left front, a narrow nek, cut like a nick in the ridge, seemed to promise access to the easy ground which bordered on the enemy's position. Towards this De Lisle led his men, about 350 strong. The nek was incredibly steep, especially on the northern side, down which the mounted infantrymen, leading their ponies, scrambled with great difficulty. Once at the bottom, and all again in the saddle, De Lisle began to gallop clear round the hostile position, capturing on the way a Maxim gun and two wagon loads of ammunition. The Boers, fearing to be cut off, and already much shaken by the bombardment, fled at full speed, and the 14th and 15th Brigades pressed forward at once to occupy the abandoned ground. Reaching a height overlooking Pretoria, De Lisle, at 4.45 p.m., summoned the city in the name of Lord Roberts to surrender."

ANNESLEY, WILLIAM RICHARD NORTON, Lieut., was born at Colchester 12 June, 1863, eldest son of the late Major-General W. R. Annesley and Isabel, daughter of the late Hon. and Rev. James Norton, of Anningsly Park, Ottershaw. He was educated at Cheltenham College, and at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and joined the Yorkshire Regt. 6 Feb. 1884, as Lieutenant, and was transferred to the Royal West Kent Regt. 27 Feb. 1884. He was employed in the Egyptian Army 27 Nov. 1888, to 6 Oct. 1890, and served in the Sudan in 1885 and 1886 with the Frontier Field Force, and was present at the attack on Ambigole Wells and the action at Ginniss. He was mentioned in Despatches, received the Medal, the Bronze Star, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "William Richard Norton Annesley, Lieut., Royal West Kent Regt. For the action at Ginniss." He was Staff Officer at Assouan for the operations at Toski. He became Captain 15 July, 1891, and Major 16 July, 1902, and retired 15 Dec. 1905, joining the Reserve of Officers. He died 29 Nov. 1914.

RADWAN HASSAN BEY, Major, was born in Egypt in 1853, 3rd son of the late Right Hon. Sheikh Ahmed Fayed, Judge (who died in 1874). His mother is a descendant of the Prophet. Radwan Hassan Bey is married. He was educated at Polytechnic Artillery Colleges; was first in school, especially mathematics. He joined the 1st Regt. Artillery in 1871; was Professor for the Artillery Officers in 1873; in 1881 he was Commandant, Field Artillery Battery; and in 1882 was in the Battle of Tel-el-Kebir; was severely wounded and taken prisoner. In 1884 and 1885, he was a Captain, and commanded a Field Battery in the Sudan Expedition, under General Earle, taking part in the battle of Keerbakaan. He was promoted Major-Commandant, Artillery, was present at the battles of Kosheh and Ginniss. Colonel Andrew Haggard says, in "Under Crescent and Star" (page 354): "Major Hassan Radwan, a very plucky fellow, of the Egyptian Artillery, was wounded very severely. This officer had distinguished himself a few days previously, when a small party of English were surrounded by a large party of the enemy, who had a gun with them, at a small sand-bag post at Ambigol Wells on the railway. Major Hassan Radwan, having with him Lieut. de Lisle, a young officer in the Durham Light Infantry, and a few men mounted on camels, had broken through the enemy's lines and ridden in to assist in the defence. I believe that both the Egyptian and the English officer were afterwards the recipients of the Distinguished Service Order for this smart little affair." He received the Medjidie, 4th and 3rd Classes; also the Osmanieh (4th Class); the Egyptian Star and the English Medal; and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "Radwan Hassan, Major, Egyptian Artillery. For Action at Ginniss." He was present at the battles of Toski and Argeen; was promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel; Inspector of Artillery and Ammunition Stores. In 1902 he was appointed Sub-Governor of the Frontier; he was promoted to Colonel and appointed Mudir of Beni Souef, 1895; Prefect of Ghizeh, 1898; Mudir of Mimeh, 1901–4. He has the Osmanieh, 3rd Class; is a Pasha; Mir Miran Mondir of Menonjah Province, 1903; Mudir (Prefect) of Ghorbich since 1904. He has written "A Pamphlet on the Art of Artillery." Colonel Radwan Hassan Bey's favourite recreation is shooting.

RADWAN SAID, Lieut., served in the Sudan in 1885 and 1886, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "Radwan Said, Lieut., Egyptian Camel Corps."

The following refers to Colonel Hassan Radwan, D.S.O., and to Major Said Radwan, D.S.O.:

"H.Q., Egyptian Army,
"War Office, Cairo.
"24 Dec. 1894.

"From the Sirdar, Egyptian Army.
"To H.B. Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Egypt.

"My Lord,

"I have the honour to inform you that Major, now Lieut.-Colonel, Hassan Radwan, D.S.O., Egyptian Army, is still alive, and is now holding the appointment of Sub-Governor, Frontier. With reference to Lieut., since promoted Adjutant, Major Said Radwan, D.S.O., this officer left Cairo on or about July, 1892, for Tripoli, with the intention of returning overland to Cairo. He has not been heard of since, and, as when he left Cairo he was in an advanced stage of consumption, there is no doubt that he is dead. He was struck off the strength of the Egyptian Army on the 1st Jan. 1893.

"I have the honour to be, My Lord,
"Your most obedient servant,
"Herbert Kitchener,
"Sirdar."

London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886.—"The late Honorary Major-General Alfred George Huyshe, C.B., would have been recommended for this distinction had he survived."

London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886.—"The Queen has been graciously pleased to give orders for the appointment of the undermentioned Officer to be a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order. For operations in Burma."

CHANNER, BERNARD, Colonel, was born at Allahabad 20 Sept. 1846, son of George Birdwood Channer, Colonel, Bengal Artillery, and Susan, daughter of the Rev. Nicholas Kendall, M.A., Vicar of Lanlivery, Cornwall, cousin of Nicholas Kendall, J.P., D.L., M.P. He was a brother of the late Colonel G. N. Channer, V.C., C.B. He was educated at Cheltenham College, and joined the 3rd West India Regt. as Ensign 13 Feb. 1867; became Lieutenant, 14th Foot, 14 March, 1868, and Lieutenant, 2nd Native Infantry Regt., 18 Feb. 1871. He served in the Afghan Campaign of 1878–79–80 (Medal); became Captain, B.S.C. (now I.S.C.), 1879; Colonel Channer married, 5 Jan. 1881, at Sydenham, Kent, Alice Bovell Cramp, daughter of Francis Cramp, Esq., and their children are: (1) Bernard Gordon, born 7 Oct. 1881, Major, 54th Sikhs, General Staff, Simla; (2) Guy, born, 12 Nov. 1884, Major, 14th Sikhs, General Staff, Simla, (wounded at the Dardanelles, May, 1915; proceeded to Mesopotamia in 1917; wounded Oct. 1918, and on the same day was awarded the D.S.O. for gallantry while commanding his regiment in action); (3) Keith Francis, born 18 Feb. 1892, Captain, 36th Jacob's Horse, Indian Army. He served in the Burma Campaign of 1885–7, and was present at the taking of Minhla and at the action of Napeh; received the Medal with clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "For operations in Burma, Bernard Channer, Capt., Bengal Staff Corps." The decoration is thought to have been awarded for services in connection with the raising of Mounted Infantry in Burma, and for services with them on active service. It is believed that Capt. Channer suggested the raising of the Mounted Infantry; and this is supported by letters, extracts from which are given below.

Bernard Channer.

The first is from General F. B. Norman:

"My dear Channer,

"I sent your report, and also your note about raising a Corps of Mounted Infantry, to the A.A.G. for submission to the General, and I supported your proposal.

"Yours truly,
"F. B. Norman."

The next letter was also from General Norman:

"I have received your scheme for a small Corps of M.I., and at once sent it on to General Prendergast."

This was dated 21 Dec. 1885. The final letter from General Prendergast, dated 4 Dec. 1885 (Mandalay), says:

"I have read your interesting letter to General Norman, and am glad to hear you are going on so well. I have sanctioned your Light Horse. . . ."

Capt. Channer was senior of the first batch of officers ordered to attend at Windsor Castle for the first Investiture of the Distinguished Service Order. He was very ill at the time, or he would have been the first officer personally decorated with the D.S.O. by Queen Victoria. As it is, he was the first on the list of three summoned to the Investiture. The Warrant for the D.S.O., signed by Queen Victoria, is dated 25 Nov. 1886. He became Major in 1887; served on the North-West Frontier of India, Lushai, 1889 (Despatches, G.G.O., 292 of '89. Clasp); became Lieutenant-Colonel 13 Feb. 1893; served on the North-West Frontier of India, 1897–8, Tochi; Colonel on the Staff, and commanded the Base of Edwardabad (Medal with clasp). He was given the Brevet of Colonel 1 July, 1898, and retired from the 2nd Q.V.O. Rajput Light Infantry 20 Sept. 1903. In 1903 Colonel Channer settled down at High Bickington, North Devon. He occupied himself in all country sports, especially shooting and fishing; took a great interest in politics and all local affairs, and never lost his keenness for his profession, which he loved so well. Colonel Channer died at High Bickington 4 Dec. 1918.

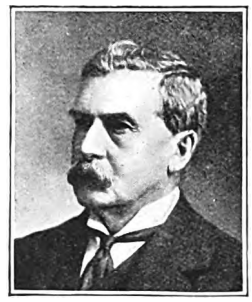
ALDWORTH, WILLIAM, Capt., was born at Harmony Lodge, Carrigtwohill, co. Cork, on 3 Oct. 1855, eldest surviving son of Colonel Robert Aldworth, North Cork Rifles, J.P. co. Cork, formerly Captain, 94th Regt., and Olivia Catherine, daughter of the Rev. James Morton, Rector, Newmarket, co. Cork. He was educated at Rossall and Clifton. His first commission was antedated 13 June, 1874. He joined the 16th Regt. 20 July, 1876; was Adjutant, Bedfordshire Regt. 1877–81; became Captain 30 March, 1881; was A.D.C. to Lieut.-General Sir H. Prendergast, V.C., K.C.B., in Madras and in the Burma Expedition, 1885–7, and was mentioned in Despatches. He was A.D.C. to the General Officer Commanding in Burma, and was mentioned again in Despatches by Major-General L. B. Gordon: The Burma Campaign, from London Gazette, 3 Dec. 1887: "Capt. William Aldworth, 2nd Bedfordshire Regt., formerly my acting A.D.C., deserves special notice for the dashing manner in which he relieved Thabyabin. He started at a two-hours' notice, and rode 55 miles through a very disturbed country to Taindak, where he took command of the small body of men who relieved the beleaguered garrison." Capt. Aldworth received the Medal and clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "William Aldworth, Capt., Bedfordshire Regt. For operations in Burma." He passed in French, German, Hindu and Urdu, and qualified in 1889 as interpreter in Russian. In 1894 he passed the Staff College. He served in the Isazai Expedition, 1895 (clasp); with the Chitral Relief Force; was present at the storming of the Malakand, and at the action near Khar (Medal, clasp for Relief of Chitral); officiated as A.A.G., Pindi, 1st Sept. to 30 Nov. 1895; was D.A.A.G., 2nd Brigade, Tirah Field Force, 5 Oct. 1897, to 6 April, 1898; promoted Major 1 Feb. 1898; was present at the action at the Sampagha Pass and at the action of the Arhanga Pass (Despatches). He took part in the operations against the Khani Khel Chamkanis, and in the operations in the Bazar Valley (Despatches, Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel). He was D.A.A.G., 2nd Brigade, Kyber Force, 7 April to 11 June, 1898. Lieut.-Colonel Aldworth was specially selected to command the 2nd Battn. of the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry in Sept. 1898, and took them to South Africa in 1899. He was killed in action 18 Feb. 1900, when leading a forlorn hope at Paardeberg. Lieut. W. H. Fife, 2nd Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry (who was himself killed soon afterwards by a spent bullet), wrote of Lieut.-Colonel Aldworth: "I can only say that he was the most gallant soldier I shall ever see, or wish to see, and it was owing to his splendid example that we advanced so steadily when others refused to budge. I would willingly have been killed instead of him, as I could have easily been replaced, and he cannot. I can only add that those who saw the advance said it was magnificent, and, though it has been called the Cornwalls' and the Canadians' charge, it was the Cornwalls' charge only, and Colonel Aldworth's charge in particular. His loss is quite irretrievable. He was hit in the forehead just as he had said: 'Come on, Dukes! Come on, Cornwalls!' He fell, but, raising himself on his elbow, added: 'Go on men, and finish it!'" In a long list of recommendations in 1901, Lord Roberts added Lieut.-Colonel Aldworth, D.S.O., Commanding the 2nd Battn. Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, as one whom he would specially have selected for reward, and he wrote in a private letter to Miss Aldworth, dated 17 March, 1901: "When I submitted to Her Majesty's Government a list of names of officers who had rendered 'conspicuously valuable services' before their death, I felt that the list would be incomplete unless it included that of your brother, the late Lieut.-Colonel Aldworth. At Paardeberg he led his men under a withering fire with a courage and devotion which elicited admiration of all who witnessed it, and he died with his face to the foe, like a gallant Irish gentleman. . . ." A writer in an Indian paper said: "Lieut.-Colonel Aldworth, D.S.O., was one of the finest horsemen and most successful jockeys that India has ever seen. He could train a horse as well as ride one." In May, 1877, he and a brother officer walked from Hyde Park Corner to Portsmouth, 76 miles, and several miles more by mistake—started at 6 p.m. and arrived between 7 and 8 p.m. (25 hours). They did the 50th mile at 5 miles an hour.

William Aldworth.

DORWARD, ARTHUR ROBERT FORD, Capt., was born 13 July, 1848, at Ootacamund, son of James Dorward, Inspector-General of Hospitals, Madras, and Charlotte Ford. He was educated at Cheltenham and at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and joined the Royal Engineers on 15 July, 1868. In 1879–80, he served in the Afghan War, being present at the action of Kam Dakka, and in the operations in the Kama District (Despatches, Medal). He was promoted to Captain 1 May, 1881. He served in the Burmese Expedition of 1885–88; for three months commanded the Queen's Own Sappers and Miners, and then Commanding Royal Engineers. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 22 June, 1886, and 2 Sept. 1887], received a clasp, was thanked by the Government of India, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order, for mention in Despatches as having proved capability of leading men. The Brevet of Major was given in the same campaign (1 July, 1887), for mention in Despatches as one whose promotion would be of advantage to the Army. His D.S.O. was gazetted 26 Nov. 1886: "Arthur Robert Ford Dorward, Capt., Royal Engineers. For operations in Burma." He became Major, 1 Oct. 1887, and Lieutenant-Colonel 21 June, 1894, and commanded the Royal Engineers in Jamaica in 1897–99. He was promoted to Colonel 10 Aug. 1899, and was Colonel on the Staff, Wei-hai-Wei, 10 Aug. 1899, to 20 June, 1900; in the Chinese Expedition of 1900 was Brigadier-General commanding the British troops until the arrival of the Indian Contingent. He commanded British, American and Russian troops in the action near Tientsin, 9 July, and British, American and Austrian troops at the capture of Tientsin city, July, 1900 (Despatches [London Gazette, 14 May, 1901], Medal with clasp, K.C.B.). He commanded Allied troops in the defeat of the Boxers, near Tientsin, in August, and subsequently in the Expedition to Tu Liu. From the date of his arrival in Tientsin he collected junks for the advance of the British, Austrian and Italian troops from Tientsin to Peking, and he commanded troops at Shanghai till 25 June, 1902, when he was ordered home. He commanded troops in the Straits Settlements 1903–5; was promoted to Major-General 15 July, 1905; was on the Staff in Charge of Administration, South Africa, from 15 July, 1905, till Nov. 1909. Sir Arthur Dorward retired on 13 July, 1910. Shortly after the outbreak of the European War he was asked by Lord Kitchener to undertake the hutting of Colonial troops on Salisbury Plain. On completion of that job he was appointed Inspector of Hutting at the War Office, having supervision of all military camps and roads in Great Britain and Ireland. He was mentioned in Despatches.



Arthur R. F. Dorward.

WACE, ERNEST CHARLES, Capt., was born 19 March, 1850, at Goring, Oxfordshire, son of the Rev. Richard Henry Wace, of Wadhurst, Sussex, and of Eulielia Wace. He was educated at Marlborough College, and was gazetted to the Royal Artillery 15 Dec. 1871, serving in the Jowaki Expedition, 1877–78, on the North-West Frontier of India (Medal with clasp for Jowaki). Burmese War, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "Thomas Plunket Cather, Capt., Royal Engineers. For services in Burma." He was given the Brevet of Major 1 July, 1887. Major Cather died in 1889.

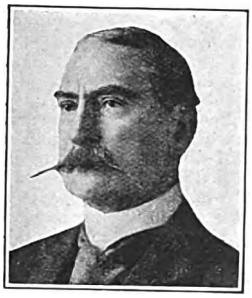
DUNDAS, LAURENCE CHARLES, Capt., was born in Ireland in 1857. He joined the King's (Liverpool) Regt. in 1878; served in the Afghan War of 1878–80; was present at the action of 28 Nov. 1878, in the Kurram Valley; at the battle and capture of Paiwar Kotal (Medal with clasp), and in the Zaimukt Expedition, 1879. He was acting Adjutant of his battalion from 1878 to 1880; Adjutant 1883–87. He served in the Burmese Expedition, 1885–87; was mentioned in Despatches, recommended for the V.C., received the Medal and clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 Nov. 1886]: "For operations in Burma. Laurence Charles Dundas, Capt., Liverpool Regt." Queen Victoria presented the Insignia of the Order to Capt. Dundas on 26 Nov. 1886, and he was the first officer to be personally decorated by Her Majesty with the new Decoration. He was Political Officer in Upper Burma in 1886; was Brigade-Major 1887–88; Staff Officer, 1st Class, 1888–90; D.A.A.G. 1890–93; officiating A.A.G. 1893–95. He served for four years in the Quartermaster-General's Department. He retired from the Army, and was Deputy Governor of Liverpool Prison 1887–89; of Portland Prison 1889–1900, and Governor of Maidstone Prison 1900–02. Major Dundas married Lady Mary Bertie, daughter of the 11th Earl of Lindsey. He died 9 June, 1909. Colonel Grogan (late commanding the King's Regt.) said of Major Dundas that he was a "good and zealous officer." He was appointed D.A.A.G. in India in 1886, in consequence of the very favourable reports which reached the Commander-in-Chief in India of the services rendered by him in Upper Burma. Colonel Le Mesurier (late commanding the 2nd King's Liverpool Regt.) wrote of Major Dundas's "distinguished conduct throughout the campaign." His "brilliant soldier-like qualities" were mentioned in Regimental Orders, dated 10 Oct. 1887; and Colonel St. John Mitchell said that Major Dundas was one of the quickest and most business-like workers he had ever known, if not the best of all the officers who had ever worked under him, and had he—Lieut.-Colonel St. John Mitchell—a big job to do, such as the sudden preparation and despatch of a large expedition, Major L. C. Dundas was the first man he would ask for—a man who could conduct the great business operation of the trooping at Calcutta without a hitch is not found every day or every year.



Laurence Charles Dundas.

MILNE, RICHARD LEWIS, Capt., was born 10 April, 1852, son of the late Lieut.-General R. Milne, of the Bengal Army. He was gazetted to the 72nd Foot 31 Aug. 1872, and became Lieutenant, Seaforth Highlanders, 31 Aug. 1873. He served with his regiment, the 72nd (1st Battn. DURNFORD, JOHN, Commander, Royal Navy, was born on the 6th Feb. 1849, son of the Rev. Francis E. Durnford, Fellow of Eton, and Rector of Greeting St. Mary, Suffolk, and of Mrs. Durnford, daughter of Admiral John Thompson, of Longparish, Hants. He was educated at Eton, and entered the Royal Navy in 1862. In 1881 he married Mary, daughter of the Rev. John Henry Kirwan, Rector of St. John's, Cornwall, and they had one son, Frederick John, Lieutenant, Royal Navy; and three daughters. He became Commander in 1882; served in the Upper Burma Expedition of 1885–86, on the Staff of Sir H. Prendergast, V.C., K.C.B., and with the Naval Brigade, being present at the engagement at Minhla. He was mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 13 Jan. 1887]: "For operations in Burma, John Durnford, Commander, Royal Navy." Commander Durnford commanded the Naval Brigade for manning armed steam launches in Upper Burma in 1887; was mentioned in Despatches and thanked by the Governor-General of India. He was promoted to Captain in 1888; was created a C.B. in 1897; became Junior Naval Lord in 1901; Commander-in-Chief, Cape of Good Hope, 1904–7; was created a K.C.B. in 1906, and was Admiral President, Royal Naval College, Greenwich, from 1908 to 1911. In 1913 he was created a G.C.B. Admiral Sir John Durnford, G.C.B., D.S.O., died on 13 June, 1914.

The "Times" of Monday, 15 June, 1914, has the following notice: "We regret to announce the death, which took place suddenly on Saturday, at his residence, Elmshurst, Catisham, Fareham, in his 66th year, of Admiral Sir John Durnford, G.C.B., D.S.O., a former Sea Lord, who saw active service in Burma. Sir John Durnford was a son of the late Rev. Francis E. Durnford, a Fellow of Eton and Rector of Creeting St. Mary, Suffolk. He was born 6 Feb. 1849, and, after preliminary education at Eton, entered the Royal Navy as a Cadet from the Britannia in Sept. 1862. He became Sub-Lieutenant in 1868, and a Lieutenant in 1872, receiving honorary certificates at the Royal Naval College on passing his examination for the latter grade. Ten years later he was promoted a Commander, and when in charge of the Mariner, on the East Indies station, took part in the Burmese War of 1885–86. He served with the field force on the staff of General Sir H. Prendergast, V.C., and also with the Naval Brigade, being present at the engagement at Minhla. For his services he was specially mentioned in Naval and Military Despatches, and was granted the Distinguished Service Order. In the following year he was placed in command of a naval brigade and a flotilla of armed launches, engaged in the suppression of dacoity in Upper Burma, when he was again mentioned in Despatches, his services receiving the approbation of the Admiralty, and being specially acknowledged by the Viceroy and by the Secretary of State for India. At the conclusion of the operations he received the India Medal with clasp for Burma, 1885–87. On 30 June, 1888, he was promoted a Captain, and among other posts held while in this rank he commanded the Vernon, the torpedo school of the Navy, from 1895 to 1899. On the occasion of Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee, in 1897, he was made a C.B., and attained flag rank in 1902. In the meanwhile he had gone to the Admiralty as Junior Sea Lord, and continued a member of the board after his promotion until Dec. 1903. His next appointment was as Commander-in-Chief on the Cape of Good Hope Station from 11 Feb. 1904, to March, 1907, and while there he became, in Oct. 1906, a Vice-Admiral. Although he held no further commands afloat his wide experience, ripe judgment and talent for organization continued to be drawn upon and utilized for the benefit and advancement of the Service, particularly as a member of various committees. He was president of the committee appointed to inquire into the Naval Medical Service, and from March, 1908, to March, 1911, was President of the Royal Naval College at Greenwich. He was actually serving on a committee in connection with the rehousing of the Museum at Greenwich at the time of his death. He became an Admiral in 1910, and retired from active service in May of last year, when, on the King's birthday, he received the G.C.B. Admiral Durnford married, in 1881, Mary Louisa Eleanor, daughter of the late Rev. J. H. Kirwan, Rector of St. John's, Cornwall, and he has a son and three daughters. Sincere, warm-hearted, and a staunch comrade, his sudden death will arouse feelings of keen regret and sorrow in a very wide circle of friends and brother officers." The "Times" of 17 June, 1914, says: "The funeral of Admiral John Durnford took place at Longparish yesterday, with naval honours. The pall-bearers were Admiral of the Fleet Lord Walter Kerr, Admiral of the Fleet Sir Gerard Noel, Admiral of the Fleet Sir Arthur Fanshawe, Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, Admiral Sir Arthur Moore, Admiral Barlow, Admiral Robinson, Surgeon-General Sir James Porter, Rear-Admiral De Chair and Rear-Admiral Napier, and Mr. C. H. Stansfield, C.B., Director of Greenwich Hospital. The King was represented by Admiral the Hon. Sir Hedworth Meux, Commander-in-Chief, Portsmouth, and Admiral Archibald Moore represented the Admiralty."

CARPENTER, ALFRED, Commander, Royal Navy, was born at Brighton on 2 Aug. 1847, son of Commander Charles Carpenter, R.N., J.P. for Sussex (died in 1883), and of Sophia Wilson (died in 1882), daughter of Thomas Wilson, of Walthamstow. He was educated at Brighton College, and entered the Royal Navy in 1861, becoming Lieutenant in 1870. In 1879 he married (1) Henrietta, daughter of G. A. F. Shadwell, and they had one son and one daughter. He was promoted to Commander in 1883; served in the Challenger Expedition (Albert Medal, 2nd Class, for saving life), and in the Sudan Expedition, 1884, in command of Myrmidon (Medal and thanks of the Admiralty). Whilst in charge of the Marine Survey of India, he piloted the War Flotilla under fire to Mandalay and Bhamo in 1885; was specially mentioned in Despatches; received the Medal, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 13 Jan. 1887]: "For operations in Burma, Alfred Carpenter, Commander, Royal Navy." Captain Carpenter was for nine years in charge of surveying vessels, and his last service H.M. Coastguard, Cowes. He married secondly, in 1891, Aetheldreda, daughter of Judge Homershan Cox, formerly a Judge of County Courts, of Marlfield House, Tonbridge, Kent. He retired from the Royal Navy in 1895, with the rank of Captain. Capt. Carpenter is the author of "Nature Notes for Ocean Voyagers." His favourite recreations are billiards and golf, and he is interested in collections of corals, in meteorology and astronomy. His son, Capt. Carpenter, R.N., of the Vindictive, won the V.C. in the European War.

Alfred Carpenter.

He was G.O.C. in Chief (2nd Class), Northern Command, 3 April, 1905, to 9 Nov. 1907; Colonel Commandant, R.A., 1907; General 10 Sept. 1909. Sir Leslie Rundle was Governor and Commander-in-Chief, Malta, 21 Sept. 1909, to 19 Feb. 1915; G.O.C in Chief, Central Force, Home Defence, 1915–1916. He was created a G.C.B. in 1911, and created a G.C.M.G. in 1915; G.O.C. in Chief, 1915–16. He is a Knight of Grace of St. John of Jerusalem in England, and a Pasha in Egypt, and a J.P. for Herts. Sir Leslie Rundle married in 1887, Eleanor Georgina, daughter of the late Capt. H. J. Montgomery Campbell, R.A., who has the King George V. Coronation Medal and is a Lady of Grace of St. John of Jerusalem in England. The following extract is from Sir Reginald Wingate's "Mahdiism and the Egyptian Sudan" (pages 315–318): "News reached Colonel Chermside, commanding at Halfa, at noon, on the 27th April, that Nur el Kauzi with his force had occupied Sarras and pushed on an outpost to Gemai. With the recollection of the last Arab advance fresh in his mind, Colonel Chermside at once decided to oust the intruders from their position. Mindful of the fact that his every movement would be reported to the enemy, and well knowing that he must strike at once before the rebels were further reinforced, he decided on a secret and sudden coup de main. Four hours after he received news of the enemy's arrival he had already despatched as advanced guard, under Major Rundle, R.A., the second cavalry squadron, 100 men, under Major Hilmi Effendi; the 2nd Camel Corps, 40 men, under Lieut. Dunning; the Irregulars, 60 men, under Lieut. Rycroft; two guns of the 1st Camel Battery, under Major Bakir Effendi. These troops were ordered to march by night as rapidly and as secretly as possible to Sarras, and to prevent en route any natives from giving warning to the enemy that troops were approaching. A small patrol also marched parallel with this force on the west bank with similar orders. The 9th Sudanese Battn., under Capt. Borrow, which formed the main body of the advance guard, was concentrated at Abka—twelve miles from Sarras—by 7 p.m., and thence continued their way to Sarras—twenty miles distant by route march. A second column, under the command of Major Lloyd, and consisting of the 1st Egyptian Battn. and Supply and Transport Columns, moved out by rail and route march, and were all concentrated at Abka in the early morning, where they were to await orders for a further advance. Major Rundle had orders to halt within three miles of Sarras and await the dawn; he was then to push on, get touch of the enemy, and engage him until the arrival of the infantry and guns. Accordingly, at dawn a dismounted picket occupied a block-house on the hills overlooking Sarras, while Lieut. Rycroft's Irregulars, supporting the Camel Corps, pushed rapidly into Sarras and seized the old railway station and the block of buildings close to it. This movement was executed under fire from a block-house in the hills to the east, some 340 yards distant, held by the enemy's riflemen. The Irregulars then seized a spur some eighty yards distant from the block-house, and held this position, which was partially defiladed from the enemy's fire, whilst the Camel Corps opened fire on the block-house from some hilly ground in front of the station. At 5.15 a.m. a strong cavalry patrol was pushed along the destroyed railway line, but before it had covered 400 yards the Arab main body, to the number of some 300, showed behind some rising ground 600 yards in front, while groups of spearmen were seen in the hills in the rear. The cavalry patrol, having accomplished its object, fell back behind the station, from which a heavy fire was now opened on the enemy's position. Messages were also sent back to Colonel Chermside, who (with Capt. Kempster, Chief Staff Officer, and Lieut. Palmer, Junior Staff Officer) was advancing rapidly with the remainder of the column. At 6.30 the two guns of the Camel Battery arrived, having marched the whole distance from Halfa—thirty-four and a half miles—in little over twelve hours, and taking up a position close to the station, opened fire with common shell on the block-house, which, unless silenced, must have inflicted considerable loss on the infantry attacking the enemy's main position. Fortunately, after firing twenty-one rounds, the gun succeeded in breaching the block-house, which was then stormed and carried by the Irregulars. The guns were then turned on the enemy's main position, which was shelled with some effect. In the meantime the infantry had arrived, and by 7 a.m., when the block-house had fallen, they were advancing to the attack. The ground now traversed by the infantry requires some description. At this time of the year the river was low. The banks here are high and unusually steep, while a sandy foreshore dotted with rugged boulders intervenes between bank and river. The left of the Arabs' position rested on the scarped bank, but the enemy when exposed to artillery fire had evacuated the open ground on which their camp stood, and had retired into a narrow valley or khor about 200 yards distant from the river. Two companies of the battalion were therefore detached, under cover of the steep bank along the foreshore, to turn the left of the enemy's position. The remainder of the battalion was left as support south of the railway station on the level ground above, while the regulars and the Camel Corps conformed to the advance on the extreme left. Previous to this the cavalry had been sent to turn the enemy's position. This they succeeded in doing simultaneously with the delivery of the front attack, driving in with considerable loss a detached party of some fifty Arabs. The second line of the enemy, consisting chiefly of ill-armed Danagla, seeing the cavalry in their rear, made no attempt to join the first line, but making straight for the river, swam across and succeeded in escaping. In the meantime, as the right flank company had neared the left of the position, the Arab spearmen, with wild yells, rose up from the khor, and, headed by their three mounted leaders, dashed down the bank. The full shock of their charge fell on the slender Egyptian fighting line, which had slowly to fall back on their supports, fighting hand to hand with their assailants. Capt. Borrow, seeing this, at once reinforced the two companies, and the heavily-pressed left company, as they felt the impetus of reinforcement, immediately began slowly to advance; the enemy, contesting every foot, fought with desperate bravery, and fell almost to a man. Many were actually killed in the water, while others, attempting to turn the left flank of the infantry, had scaled the high bank, and fell from the fire of the Irregulars, the Camel Corps, and reserve of the fighting line; it was here Nur el Kauzi was killed. By 7.45 the position, with ten standards and a considerable quantity of arms and ammunition, was captured. Almost the entire Arab fighting force of 200 men had been annihilated, while the Egyptian loss was 21 killed and 30 wounded, including two officers who had been severely wounded in the hand-to-hand fighting." The Official "History of the War in South Africa, 1899–1902" (compiled by Major-General Sir Frederick Maurice, K.C.B.; published by Messrs. Hurst and Blackett), says, in the chapter on "The Defence of Wepener," that "the 8th Division, which had been destined originally for Kimberley, was now, as fast as its units landed from England, to concentrate at Edenburg, under Lieut.-General Sir Leslie Rundle, who was then to march to Dewetsdorp, get in touch with Brabant, and when the burghers besieging Wepener had been driven north, endeavour to cut them off." On the 18th April Rundle had concentrated his division at Rosendal, and next day moved to Ooorlog's Post, and on the 20th his scouts were met by Boer patrols. "The enemy's advanced posts were found near Wakkerstroom, on the edge of a high plateau, from which rises a long ridge that proved to be the main position. Attempts on the 20th and the 21st to turn the flanks of this ridge were unsuccessful, but on the information obtained during the engagement, Rundle based a scheme for an attack on the 22nd, which he submitted by telegraph to the Commander-in-Chief. In his answer Lord Roberts told him that French was advancing via Leeuwkop on Dewetsdorp with the 3rd and 4th Cavalry Brigades and the 11th division (Pole-Carew), and desired that he should not commit himself to a definite assault until he was in touch with them. . . . Rundle accordingly halted for the next three days; he pushed mounted reconnaissances round the enemy's right flank, and kept up a desultory shell and rifle fire against the front of the Boers' main position until the 24th, when he established connection with Pole-Carew." Sir Conan Doyle says, in his "Great Boer War" (page 297): "It is probable that the deliberation with which the operations were conducted was due to Rundle's instructions to wait until the other forces were in position. His subsequent movements showed that he was not a general who feared to strike. . . . On the Wednesday morning Rundle, with the addition of Pole-Carew's division, was strong enough for any attack, while French was in a position on the flank. Every requisite for a great victory was there except the presence of an enemy. The Wepener siege had been raised, and the force in front of Rundle had disappeared as only Boer armies can disappear. . . . Lord Roberts failed in his plan of cutting off De Wet's army, but, at the expense of many marches and skirmishes, the south-east of the state was cleared of the enemy." With an army, Conan Doyle tells us later, between forty and fifty thousand strong, "Lord Roberts advanced upon the Transvaal. . . . Rundle, with the 8th Division and Brabant's Colonial Division, remained in rear of the right flank to confront any force which might turn it. . . . When Lord Roberts had occupied Pretoria, he had left his long line of communications very imperfectly guarded behind him. On the flank of this line of communications were President Steyn and his Free Staters. This army was held in check by Rundle's Division and the Colonial Division on the south, while Colvile, and afterwards Methuen, endeavoured to pen them in on the west. The task was a hard one, however, and though Rundle succeeded in holding his line intact, it appeared to be impossible in that wide country to coop up an enemy so mobile. A strange game of hide-and-seek ensued, in which De Wet, who led the Boer raids, was able again and again to strike our line of rails and to get back without serious loss." Conan Doyle describes the Battle of Diamond Hill, and then describes the general military situation in the Free State: "When Lord Roberts had swept past to the north he had brushed aside the flower of the Orange Free State army, who occupied the considerable quadrilateral which is formed by the north-east of that State. The function of Rundle's 8th Division and of Brabant's Colonial Division was to separate the sheep from the goats by preventing the fighting burghers from coming south and disturbing those districts which had been settled. For this purpose Rundle formed a long line which should serve as a cordon. Moving up through Trommel and Clocolan, Ficksburg was occupied on 25 May by the Colonial Division, while Rundle seized Senekal, forty miles to the north-west. The Boers were in full retreat, but now, as always, they were dangerous. One cannot take them for granted, for the very moment of defeat is that at which they are capable of some surprising effort. Rundle, following them up from Senekal, found them in strong possession of the kopjes at Biddulphsberg, and received a check in his endeavour to drive them off. It was an action fought amid great grass fires, where the possible fate of the wounded was horrible to contemplate. The 2nd Grenadiers, the Scots Guards, the East Yorkshires, and the West Kents were all engaged, with the 2nd and 79th Field Batteries and a force of Yeomanry. Our losses incurred in the open from unseen rifles were thirty killed and 130 wounded, including Colonel Lloyd of the Grenadiers. Two days later Rundle, from Senekal, joined hands with Brabant from Ficksburg, and a defensive line was formed between those two places, which was held unbroken for two months, when the operations ended in the capture of the greater part of the force opposed to him. Clements's Brigade, consisting of the 1st Royal Irish, the 2nd Bedfords, the 2nd Worcesters, and the 2nd Wiltshires, had come to strengthen Rundle, and altogether he may have had as many as twelve thousand men under his orders. It was not a large force with which to hold a mobile adversary at least eight thousand strong, who might attack him at any point of his extended line. So well, however, did he select his positions that every attempt of the enemy, and there were many, ended in failure. Badly supplied with food, he and his half-starved men held bravely to their task, and no soldiers in all that great host deserve better of their country. At the end of May, then, the Colonial Division, Rundle's Division, and Clements's Brigade held the Boers from Ficksburg on the Basuto border to Senekal. This prevented them from coming south. But what was there to prevent them from coming west and falling upon the railway line? There was the weak point of the British position." Conan Doyle goes on to describe the campaign against De Wet, and says that in Oct. and Nov. Hunter, Rundle, Brabant and Bruce Hamilton were in the Orange River Colony. Their forces with others were engaged in breaking up small bodies of the enemy, hunting for arms, bringing in refugees, collecting supplies and rounding up cattle. Later on General Rundle commanded Harrismith District, where "he was kept busy in exploring the rough country in his district, the same district which had been the scene of the operations against Prinsloo and the Fouriesburg surrender."

KEMPSTER, FRANCIS JAMES, Capt., was born on the 12th March, 1855. He entered the Army in 1875; served in the Afghan War in 1880, with the Khyber Line Force, Hissarak Expedition (Medal); in Bechuanaland, 1884–85, commanding the Corps of Guides (honourably mentioned); with the Sudan Frontier Field Force, 1887–88–89. DEEDES, WILLIAM HENRY, Colonel, was born 23 Feb. 1839, at Cadogan Place, London, S.W., son of William Henry Deedes (Civil Service, India Office), and Harriet M. Deedes, daughter of the Rev. John Jeffreys. He was educated at Rugby, and was gazetted to the Rifle Brigade as Ensign on 1 May, 1855. He became Lieutenant-Colonel 9 Aug. 1882, and Brevet Colonel in Dec. 1886. He served in the Burmese Expedition in 1886–87, commanding the 1st Battn. Rifle Brigade. The following is an extract from the Records at Simla: "History of the Burmese War, 1885–86–87: Diary of Events. Colonel Deedes, Rifle Brigade, with a small party of riflemen and sappers, whilst reconnoitring, came upon an obstruction in a nullah. The party consisted of Lieut. Radclyffe, seven riflemen, nine sappers (natives), and a few Burmese Police. The latter bolted, and the sappers did not join in the charge up the hill. The party lined the bank, and the sappers were sent down to clear it. Fire was opened on them from an ambush, and two sappers were killed. Colonel Deedes, while endeavouring to drag one of the sappers (mortally wounded) out of the fire, was himself severely wounded. The party then charged, and the enemy fled. A corporal was also severely wounded when charging." "From the Commander-in-Chief, Mandalay, 1 Dec. 1886: In action near Mimba, on 30th ult., Colonel W. H. Deedes and Corpl. C. Sir James Willcocks served in the European War in 1914 and 1915, in command of the Indian Army Corps. Lieut.-Colonel J. W. B. Merewether, C.I.E., and the Right Hon. Sir Frederick Smith say of General Willcocks in "The Indian Corps in France" (pages 17, 18, 19): "On the 30th Sept. Lieut.-General Sir James Willcocks arrived with his Staff by the S.S. Malwa. His appointment as Corps Commander of the Indian troops in France had been announced on the 27th Sept., and was received with the greatest enthusiasm by all ranks. Nor was his great reputation undeserved. His name stood high in the Army as that of a very stout, skilful and efficient soldier, who had carved out a career for himself without the aid of patronage, and in complete indifference to social and political influences." Having described his military services, the authors of this most interesting and delightful book go on to say: "Such was the remarkable record of the General who led the Army of India to their great adventure in Flanders. No man in the British Army wore more decorations on his breast for active service than James Willcocks, and none bore his honours more modestly and more gallantly. He was now to be tested in surroundings which were novel even to his vast military experience. He was to be placed in situations more difficult, it may be boldly claimed, than any other Corps Commander had to face. His task demanded a subtle and intuitive insight into the mentality of the East; much sympathy, much allowance, and yet on occasion an unpitying severity. He had at once to hold, with two small, untried Indian divisions, a line which had tested the endurance of the two divisions of English veterans under General Smith-Dorrien, whom he relieved, and through all his difficulties, which were far greater than even at this time it is possible to explain, he never faltered in his courage and never lost the devotion of the troops whom he understood so well. One of the writers will never forget his conversation, after the battle of Neuve Chapelle, with an Indian officer of a shattered but heroic battalion. 'There are very few of you left, Subadar Sahib,' said the General, with deep emotion. 'There are twice as many as there were until the General Sahib visited us,' replied the officer, bleeding as he spoke from two severe wounds. General Willcocks has preserved a complete documentary record of the whole period during which he commanded the Indian Corps. His advice as to the demands which it was possible to make upon the troops for which he was responsible was not always accepted by superior authority; perhaps imperious necessity sometimes prescribed a different course. But he was seldom wrong in his estimate, and a close study of his confidential papers establishes more and more clearly his sagacity, his prescience and his courage." The Indian troops were received in France with the greatest enthusiasm. The story of their gallantry in France is admirably told in the book from which we have quoted. For his services in the European War Sir James Willcocks was twice mentioned in Despatches, and created a G.C.M.G. He is a Grand Officier of the Legion of Honour; was created a K.C.B. in 1913; a K.C.S.I. in 1914; was promoted to General in 1915. He is Colonel, Loyal North Lancashire Regt., and was appointed Governor and Commander-in-Chief, Bermuda, in 1917. He is fond of polo, shooting and riding. Sir James Willcocks married, in 1889, Winifred, second daughter of Colonel G. A. Way, C.B., B.S.C., and they have one son, Capt. James L. Willcocks, M.C.

Frederick J. D. Lugard.

The "Daily Telegraph" for 29 Jan. 1920, says in an article on "Modern Nigeria": "Six years ago, when on the great plain at Kano 30,000 African horsemen charged at the gallop, brandishing their weapons, to give the Salute of the Desert to British sovereignty, modern Nigeria was founded. It ranks as the largest of all the Crown Colonies and Protectorates of the Empire, with an area about one-third the extent of British India, and a population nearly half that of England. Already it is to European civilization one of the most important divisions of the tropical zone, and in the near future it must become far more valuable. The account, therefore, which Sir Frederick Lugard, its first Governor-General, has just given of his stewardship deserves wide publicity. The existing 'Colony and Protectorate' was formed, we may recall, by the amalgamation of Northern and Southern Nigeria, two areas divided by an arbitrary line, and for their administration, organization and development interdependent, but presenting diverse conditions. The North is, in general, prairie country, high and dry; had been for long under the influence of Islam, and in the last half of the nineteenth century was devastated by inter-tribal warfare and slave-hunting Emirs. The South receives the equatorial rainfall, is a land of dense forests and dense population, yam fields and mangrove swamps, with a religion of fetish worship, witchcraft and human sacrifice. The worst evils of this dispensation—we need only recall the suppression of the blood-stained tyranny of Benin—as well as the ravages of the Northern Emirs, one of whom boasted that he would 'die with a slave in his mouth,' had been abolished by British arms before the amalgamation. The task which Sir Frederick Lugard set himself was not merely to achieve political and financial unity, but to raise 'each part of Nigeria to the level of the highest plane attained by any particular part.' The North needed material development; the South a better native administration and judicial system. The first duty of the Government is that of a protector and trustee of the welfare of the native races. Without the social chaos of sudden abolition slavery is being brought to an end. An elaborate system of Courts has been established, by which petty chiefs, natives learned in their own law, and paramount chiefs and their officials, dispense justice. The sale of imported spirits to the natives, a traffic which Mr. Chamberlain pronounced discreditable to the British name, is now only permitted in one-fifth and strictly controlled in the rest of the Protectorate, and Sir Frederick Lugard claims to have proved that the Government does not need the revenue nor commerce the profits derived from the trade. The importance of Nigeria to our own industries consists primarily in the fact that it is many thousands of miles nearer the United Kingdom than the other countries of the Empire from which tropical produce is exported. Lagos is about a fortnight's voyage from Liverpool, and Lagos and the other ports of that coast can provide us with an inexhaustible supply of vegetable oils. Before the war the greater part of this store, nearly 400,000 tons of oil and oilseeds, to a value of more than £5,300,000 in a year, was shipped to Germany. Sir Frederick Lugard supports the levying in Nigeria of an export duty on produce consigned to foreign countries, thus enabling the Empire to supply its needs at bed-rock price, with possible discrimination between Allies, neutrals, and enemies, and suggests that the duty should be used for the development of Nigeria and the payment of the charges on the £6,000,000 of the Imperial War Debt which the Colony has taken over." His D.S.O. was awarded for operations in Burma.

SINCLAIR, ALFRED LAW, Capt., was born 30 April, 1853, at Lifford, near Strabane, son of W. Sinclair, Esq., J.P. and D.L., of Holy Hill, Strabane, County Tyrone, and Sarah Strode. announcing the news of his death, the "Times" (26 July, 1917) said: "A correspondent writes: 'General Tanner had retired from the Service before the war broke out, and was close on 60 years of age, but there was no officer of his grade at the front more vigorous in the performance of his duties, and more worthy of imitation in this respect. In the saddle all day, for he did not allow himself a midday meal, no single detail of his many responsibilities was ever neglected. In the days before civilian authorities took over responsibilities for the roads, his corps' roads were an example for all, while yet, before recent offensives, we remained immobilized in face of the old German line, the base line of defences, for which he was answerable, was a pattern worthy of imitation by all other corps. He had an extraordinary power of getting good work from his subordinates. "Thorough," was his watchword. There was never a soldier more conscientious of his duty.'" An obituary notice in the "Cheltonian" (Oct. 1917), closes thus: "The following are a few extracts from some of the letters received about him: From the Regimental Sergeant-Major, 22nd Division: 'I knew him so very well. We have shared food together, travelled together, slept together. I came to look upon him as a father, and my men would have done anything for him.' From various officers: 'His dogged determination to do his duty in all matters and under all circumstances, quietly and conscientiously, were the most notable features of his character.'. 'The nation has lost a valuable servant, and his brother officers a highly respected and valued friend.' 'Everyone who met the General liked and admired him, and it is no exaggeration to say that those, like myself, who were fortunate enough to serve directly under him absolutely loved him.' 'A gallant and modest gentleman, who was at the same time one of the best Generals in all the British Armies.' We add some lines from a well-known epitaph of other days, which he admired, and which, in fact, describes the spirit of his own life:

"'. . . Friend to truth! Of soul sincere,
In action faithful, and in honour clear;
Who broke no promise, served no private end,
Who gained no title, and who lost no friend!'"

CAULFEILD, ALGERNON MONTGOMERIE, Lieut., was born 28 Aug. 1860, 4th son of the late Lieut.-Colonel Montgomerie Caulfeild, Weston Park, Lucan, County Dublin. He was educated at the Royal Academy, Gosport, and Heidelberg College, and joined the 66th Berkshire Regt. 17 Dec. 1881; served in Afghanistan; was present at the engagement at Giriskh with the Walli's mutinous troops at the Battle of Maiwand (wounded) as a Corporal, and subsequent defence of Kandahar (Medal for distinguished conduct in the field, and Medal with clasp). He, though wounded at Maiwand, saw to Capt. Melliss, who was also wounded, being placed on a camel. He afterwards got a mule, and rode with Lieut. Lynd, who was wounded, taking him to Kandahar. The late Sir John Slade, then in command of E Battery, B Brigade, recommended him for the V.C. He was made a Sergeant, and asked, when the Distinguished Conduct Medal was given him by Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, to change his name from Sergt. Williams to Sergeant Caulfeild, and soon after was given a commission in the 5th Fusiliers. He served in Burma, 1886–88, as Brigade Transport Officer to Major-General Sir Robert Low, K.C.B.; was mentioned in Despatches, 2 Sept. 1887, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 25 Nov. 1887]: "Algernon Montgomerie Caulfeild, Lieut., Northumberland Fusiliers. For services in Burma." He was made a Captain in the 2nd Border Regt. In 1889 he was serving with mounted infantry in the Chin Lushai country (Medal with three clasps). He was promoted to Major, 23 Feb. 1898, and retired 27 Aug. 1902. He served in the European War, as Second in Command of the Border Regt., and was killed in action on 9 Aug. 1915, at Gallipoli.

The following are some details sent by relatives:

The first is a letter written by the only surviving officer of the 6th Border Regt, 29th Division, who was wounded at Suvla in the attack on Hill 70, Gallipoli Peninsula, 10 Aug. 1915:

"Mayfield,
"Freshfield, near Liverpool.

"DEAR MISS CAULFEILD,

"I am sorry to say I can hold out no hope of Major Caulfeild being alive; in fact, when I made up the return I felt I ought to have shown him as killed, but I could find no man that ever saw him again after he went off towards the fire on Burnt Hill—he went walking off towards the Turkish trenches as if he were walking down Piccadilly. Capt. Gilbanks, who went off in that direction with his Platoon, was killed, and his Platoon practically wiped out. Any men of it that I have seen did not see him. It is possible that his body will never be found. I feel I have lost a great friend, and one of the bravest comrades it was possible to serve with; he did not know what fear was. I saw him down the front of the two supporting companies under a hail of bullets in a way no living man could forget. There is another point that may go to prove that he is killed; as far as I know he was the only man that wore leggings. Well, during the attack on Burnt Hill an officer called Blake, attached to the South Wales Borderers, who was next me in Hospital, said that on the 21st he saw as he passed a smartly dressed Major lying near the top dressed in leggings; of course he had no time to look, and afterwards we were driven off the Hill again. If I hear any more I will let you know. I am glad to feel I have been privileged to serve under Major Caulfeild. Colonel Broadrick I know had the highest opinion of him, and we all know that if he had chosen he could have obtained a comparatively soft job; but he preferred to go into action leading men. Please accept my deepest sympathy.

"Yours very truly,
"G. DARWELL."

"NOTE—

"My brother having been seen by General Maxwell from Chocolate Hill on 9th August advancing towards enemy, but no other news has been heard of him since. He was known to have been badly wounded. This makes me think that the Major seen on top of hill is he, and not being able to get along he would lie still. So his little daughter and I, knowing he has been in many a tight corner, 'hope on,' and think he is in Constantinople, a prisoner of war. He is well acquainted with Eastern customs, having served for 20 years in India, two years in Egyptian Army, and can talk French, Hindustani, a little German, and Turkish. So will be cared well for by the Turk.

"JAMES M. CAULFEILD,
"Capt. R.N.

"General Lord Byng got this information for me from General Maxwell.—M. CAULFEILD."

WYNYARD, EDWARD GEORGE, Lieut., was born at Saharanpur, North-West Provinces, India, 1 April, 1861, son of the late William Wynyard, J.P., of Hursley, Hants, Judge of the High Court, Allahabad, Bengal Civil Service. He was educated at Woodcote House, Windlesham, and at Charterhouse, and joined the Army 12 May, 1883. He served in the King's Regt. from 1883 to 1890; took part in the Burma Expedition of 1885–87 (Despatches twice; Medal with clasp, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 25 Nov. 1887]: "Edward George Wynyard, Lieut., Liverpool Regt. For services during the recent operations in Burma.") The decoration was awarded for the following services: "On 12 June, 1885, in Upper Burma, a large force of rebels under Oo Temah were beaten off after attacking a small force of the 8th King's Liverpool Regt. and 2nd Bengal Infantry. They were followed and found entrenched strongly in a walled pagoda, which was carried by assault." General Sir Robert Low, K.C.B., etc., etc., in his Despatch, stated that "owing to the bold leading of a handful of tired men by Lieut. Wynyard, after the death of Capt. Dunsford (2nd Bengal Infantry), a position of considerable danger was averted, and as a result of this success order was restored in the surrounding district." General Sir G. S. White, V.C., emphasized the above in his Despatch, and Lieut. Wynyard was specially promoted to a company into the 41st Welsh Regt. He was awarded the Humane Society's Medal in 1895 for rescuing a Swiss peasant from under the ice on the lake of Davos. He became Captain in 1890 in the Welsh Regt. From 1897–1899 he was captain of the Hampshire County Cricket Eleven. Capt. Wynyard was asked by Stoddart to join the All England Eleven v. Australia, but declined on account of Army duties. He was Adjutant, Oxford University Volunteers, 1899–1900; Instructor in Military Engineering at the Royal Military College, 1900; retired in 1903. He was Captain, M.C.C. New Zealand Team, 1906; was invited to Captain M.C.C. Australian Team in 1907, but was obliged to decline for family reasons. He twice accompanied representative M.C.C. teams to South Africa in 1905 and 1909, and the M.C.C. team to America, 1907; was appointed representative of the South African Cricket Association in England, 1908. In 1914, Capt. Wynyard married Sarah Louise, daughter of the late James G. Worts, of Toronto, and they have one son, born 23 May, 1918. He became Major, King's Liverpool Regt. in Sept. 1914; was attached for duty with the Army Ordnance Corps, May, 1915; appointed to the Middlesex Regt. Nov. 1916. Major Wynyard's favourite recreations, besides cricket, are football (Old Carthusians and Corinthians); golf (Camberley Heath); tobogganing (Champion Tobogganer of Europe, 1894).

Edward George Wynyard.

MORSE, FRANK ALEXANDER, Lieut., became Lieutenant, South Staffordshire Regt., 4 May, 1884; served in Burma in 1885–87, part of the time with the Mounted Infantry; was several times mentioned in Despatches; received the Medal and clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 25 Nov. 1887]: "Frank Alexander Morse, Lieut., Somerset Light Infantry. For services in Burma." He became Captain 4 Jan. 1890, and he resigned from the Army 11 Feb. 1891.

COXHEAD, THOMAS LANGHORNE, Lieut., was born at Petersham, Surrey, 8 Oct. 1864, 2nd son of Henry George Coxhead, Merchant, formerly of Hardwick House, and Susan Amelia, daughter of the Rev. Cornelius Thompson. He was educated at Bute House, Petersham, Surrey, and the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich; entered the Royal Artillery 5 July, 1884; served with the Burmese Expedition, with an elephant battery 10 Oct. 1886 (severely wounded); Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 25 Nov. 1887]: "Thomas Langhorne Coxhead, Lieut., Royal Artillery." The D.S.O. was awarded (probably not for any particular act) for services generally during the 1886 Burma Campaign, on being mentioned by Lord Roberts in Despatches. Lord Roberts, in a private letter to Lieut.-Colonel Coxhead, says: "It gives me great pleasure to express my opinion of your services as an officer of the Royal Artillery, especially during the Burma Campaign in 1886, when I was Commander-in-Chief in that country. Your conduct was brought to my notice at the time, and was such as to enable me to recommend you for the Distinguished Service Order." The Lieutenant-Colonel Commanding Royal Artillery, Burma Field Force, remarked on the reports of Lieuts. Pullen and Coxhead "on the recent operations near Yermethin and Ningyan." He said: "The reports of these officers do them much credit, the more so as the notes and sketches from which they were framed must have been made in the face of somewhat adverse circumstances." Major Sorell, R.A., wrote, 28 Feb. 1887, of Lieut. Coxhead: "This officer has served with the battery under my command from 20 April, 1886. He has been many times in action, both with me and in command of a half-battery of artillery, and on every occasion showed self-reliance, courage and knowledge of his duties rare in so young an officer. He was on one occasion placed in command of a column, by his senior officer being killed, and brought it back from a difficult position with skill and tact. He was very severely wounded on 10 Oct. 1886, and had to be invalided home. Brigadier-General Lockhart, C.B., C.S.I., asked for him as orderly officer, but his services at that time could not be spared. I consider him about the best subaltern officer I have met during my service." Lieut. Coxhead's services were also specially mentioned in a report of Major-General Sir G. S. White, K.C.B., V.C., commanding the Upper Burma Field Force, published in the London Gazette of 2 Sept. 1887. He was again specially mentioned in a Despatch by Lieut.-General Alfred Gaselee, commanding the British Contingent, China Field Force [London Gazette, 13 Sept. 1901] (Despatches, Medal). He became Captain in July, 1893. Capt. Coxhead married, in 1900, Eliza Lort Winter, daughter of the Rev. D. Winter Morris, Vicar of St. Ishmael's, Milford Haven, and their children are: John Ralph Winter Coxhead, born, 19 May, 1903, and Caroline May Coxhead, born 8 May, 1907. From Aug. 1900, to Aug. 1901 Capt. Coxhead served as Brigade-Major with the China Expeditionary Force. He received the China Medal, and was specially mentioned in a Despatch of Lieut.-General A. Gaselee, commanding the British Contingent, China Field Force [London Gazette, 13 Sept. 1901]. He was promoted Major May, 1903; Lieutenant-Colonel 21 May, 1912, and retired 13 July, 1912. Lieut.-Colonel Coxhead was appointed a Military Knight of Windsor, 1914. He was in the R.M.A. Cricket Eleven, 1883 and 1884, and played three times for the R.A. in the R.A. and R.E. matches later, and played golf for the R.A. He was appointed Lieutenant-Colonel R.G.A. on outbreak of war on 10 Sept. 1914.

LAMPORT, WILLIAM, Lieut., joined the Royal Artillery; became Lieutenant 5 July, 1884; served in Burma 1886–87, as Orderly Officer to Brigadier-General Lockhart; was mentioned in Despatches, received the Medal and clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 25 Nov. 1887]: "William Lamport, Lieut., Royal Artillery. For services in Burma." He died 1 June, 1890.

London Gazette, 3 Jan. 1888.—"War Office, 3 Jan. 1888. The Queen has been graciously pleased to give orders for the appointment of the undermentioned officer to be Companion of the Distinguished Service Order, viz.:—For operations in Burma."

AIREY, HENRY PARKE, Capt., was born at Kingthorpe Hall, Yorkshire, 3 Aug. 1844, 2nd son of Capt. H. C. Airey. He was educated at Marlborough, and at the Royal Military College, Addiscombe; was gazetted to the 101st R.M. Fusiliers as Ensign in 1859; served in India six years, on the North-Western Frontier, and retired in 1866; also in the same year went to Australia, joining the New South Wales Artillery in 1878. He served as Lieutenant with the New South Wales Contingent in Egypt, 1885; A.D.C. to General Fremantle at advance and capture of Tamai (Egyptian Medal; clasp, and Khedive's Star), 1885. Capt. Airey volunteered for service in Burma, 1886–7, attached to Sir G. White's Staff; commanded Gardner Gun Battery at attack on Hwai-Hwaing; was severely wounded, losing an arm, and was mentioned in Despatches, and thanked by the Governor-General of India. He received the Brevet of Major for distinguished services; was made Honorary A.D.C. to the Governor of New South Wales, received the Burma Medal and clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 3 Jan. 1888]: "Henry Parke Airey, Capt., New South Wales Artillery." The D.S.O. was awarded for distinguished service, coolness under fire, and marked gallantry (His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, Burma, letter to the Viceroy of India). He was created a C.M.G. in 1900, and became Lieutenant-Colonel, commanding the Brigade, Divisional Field Artillery, New South Wales. He served in South Africa in 1900, and was mentioned in Despatches. He was promoted to Colonel. He married Florence Ada, youngest daughter of A. H. M'Culloch, of Sydney, New South Wales. Colonel Airey died on the 12th Oct. 1911, at Panplaats, Transvaal, and an obituary notice of him appeared in the "Times." His favourite recreations were cricket (1st Eleven, Marlborough College; Captain, Addiscombe College Eleven, and Regimental, 1885–6; Captain, New South Wales Artillery Eleven); hunting and driving; Master of Sydney Hunt Club.

London Gazette, 9 March, 1888.—"War Office, 9 March, 1888. The Queen has further been graciously pleased to give orders for the appointment of the undermentioned officers to be Companions of the Distinguished Service Order."

PIGOTT, CHARLES BERKELEY, Capt., was born 13 Jan. 1859, son of Sir Charles Robert Pigott, 3rd Baronet, and Mary Louisa (who died in 1873), daughter of the late Capt. C. Hallowell Carew, R.N., of Beddington Park, Surrey. He joined the 60th King's Royal Rifles; served in the Zulu War, 1879 (Medal with clasp); in the Boer War, 1881, with Mounted Infantry; in the Egyptian Campaign of 1882, in which he was dangerously wounded. He received the Medal, Bronze Star, the 5th Class Medjidie, and was promoted Captain, and given a troop in the 21st Lancers. He served in the Eastern Sudan Campaign in 1884 (two clasps); with the Nile Expedition, 1884–5 (two clasps). He was given the Brevet of Major in 1886, and in the same year married Fanny Ada, daughter of the Rev. Wellesley Pole Pigott, and Fanny, daughter of the late Bernard Granville, Esq., of Wellesbourne Hall, Warwickshire, and they had two children: Berkeley (the present Baronet), and Florence Ada Cecile. He served on the West Coast of Africa, 1887–8; and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 9 March, 1888]: "Charles Berkeley Pigott, Major, 21st Lancers." For services in Burma. He was promoted Lieutenant-Colonel in 1896, and created a C.B. Lieut.-Colonel Pigott took part in the Ashanti Expedition of 1895–96, and was made Commandant of Kurnasi. All his promotions were Brevet, for services, and he was mentioned many times in Despatches. Lieut.-Colonel C. B. Pigott died 12 Sept. 1897. Colonel Andrew Haggard says that when Sir Evelyn Wood took over the formation of the new Egyptian Army from Baker Pasha he himself had the good fortune to be one of the officers whom the General selected as his Staff in the new force. "Accordingly, the end of January, 1883, found me on my way back to Cairo. I travelled out with Berkeley Pigott, a young officer who in those days had only four years' seniority, during which time he had been constantly on active service, and had gained four decorations for war service. Pigott had been serving in the Mounted Infantry in the late Egyptian Campaign, and had the bad luck to get a bullet through his leg at Kassassin. However, he was none the worse for that, and was, like myself, one of the selected officers for the Egyptian Army. . . . When Pigott and I arrived at Cairo on the evening of the last day of January, 1883, we descended at that jolly old caravanserai, Shepheard's Hotel." Later on Colonel Haggard describes Pigott's splendid services at the time of the cholera outbreak of 1883. He says he and some of the other officers broke into the Abbasiyeh Lunatic Asylum, and the stench and awful sights in it were "so terrible that they made even Berkeley Pigott too ill to accompany us on our rounds. Now, when it is considered that he was a brave soldier, accustomed to face war in all its most terrible aspects without flinching, it must, I think, be conceded that the lunatic asylum . . . was something awful indeed." Colonel Huggard says that "after El Teb, Pigott still remained attached to the Egyptian Cavalry. . . . Long before I reached the troops" (at the Battle of Tamai) "I noticed among them all the only three officers of the Egyptian Army who were not distinctly serving with the English Army as Englishmen. These were Chamley Turner, Hallam Parr and Pigott. They all wore, as I did myself, a bright red puggaree round their white helmets, for we had on active service discarded the fez and taken to the helmet. Very pretty, too, I thought it looked, as I saw Pigott sitting on his horse in front of a cavalry regiment, his one spot of colour relieving the whole tedium of a regiment in sad-coloured khaki."

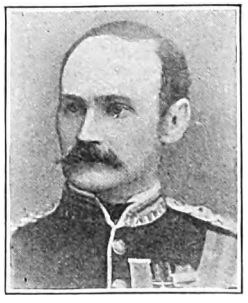
Charles Berkeley Pigott.

VALENTINE, FRANCIS ALFRID, Lieut., was born in 1858, son of the Rev. William Valentine, Vicar of Whixley, Yorkshire. He entered the Royal Navy in 1871; became a Lieutenant in 1882; served in the Boadicea in the Zulu War in 1879, gaining the Medals, and was in command of the Osprey's boats when on detached service for the suppression of the slave traffic in the Red Sea; Zanzibar, Mafic Chan Common Islands, and East Coast of Arabia in 1883. In 1887–88 he took part in the Yonnie Expedition, being in command of the Naval Brigade assisting in the capture of Rohari, Rorrietto, and other towns, gaining the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 9 March, 1888]: "Francis Alfrid Valentine, Lieut., Royal Navy." He also received the Medal with clasp. Lieut. Valentine died on the 22nd Aug. 1897.

BROWNE, GEORGE FITZHERBERT, Capt., was born on the 29th Jan. 1851. He entered the 48th Regt. 6 July, 1870; became Captain, Northamptonshire Regt. in 1882. He was D.A.A.G. and Q.M.G., and Q.M.G. Dublin District, 1884–85, and D.A.A.G. at Headquarters, Ireland, 1885–89; went on Special Service to the West Coast of Africa, serving in the expedition against the Yonnies, 1887–88; was mentioned in Despatches, received the Medal and clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 9 March, 1888]: "George Fitzherbert Browne, Capt., Northamptonshire Regt." For operations in Burma. He also served on the West Coast of Africa in 1892, taking part in the attack on Tambi; was wounded, and received an additional clasp. From 1896 to 1903 he was Military Attaché at Pekin (Medal). He was created a C.B. in 1905, and became Major-General 10 Oct. 1906, retiring from the Service on 15 Feb. 1913. Major-General G. F. Browne holds the Jubilee and Coronation Medals. He married in 1911, Harriet, widow of Capt. Bankes Tomlin.

London Gazette, 3 Aug. 1888.—"War Office, 2 Aug. 1888. The Queen has further been pleased to give orders for the following appointments to the Distinguished Service Order, and for promotions in the Army by Brevet, in recognition of the services of the undermentioned officers during the operations in Burma, 1887–88. To be Companions of the Distinguished Service Order."

GROVE, ALEXANDER SINCLAIR, Colonel, was born at Dumfries in 1840, son of Henry Jones Grove, K.H., and Major, 80th Foot (who died in March, 1847), and Mary Anne Sinclair, daughter of Capt. Sinclair, R.N. He entered the Madras Army in 1858; became Captain, Madras Staff Corps (now Indian Staff Corps), 12 June, 1870. Capt. Grove married, in 1873, Catherine, daughter of the late Major-General Ezekiel Gage, Indian Army. On 12 June, 1878, he was promoted to Major. He served in the Afghan War in 1880 (Medal); became Lieut.-Colonel in 1884; served in the Burma Campaign, 1887–88 (Medal and two clasps; created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 3 Aug. 1888]: "For services during the operations in Burma. Alexander Sinclair Grove, Colonel, Madras Staff Corps"). He was A.A.G., Madras and Burma, 1892–95, and Colonel on the Staff in 1895. Colonel Grove died on the 13th Sept. 1897.



Alexander S. Grove.

ILDERTON, CHARLES EDWARD, Major, was born 1 March, 1841, eldest son of the Rev. Canon Ilderton, of Ilderton, Northumberland. He was educated at Harrow; entered the 68th Regt. 5 Sept. 1862; served in the New Zealand War, 1864–66, being present at the attack on Gate Pah, and at other minor operations (Medal); became Captain, 1871; Major, Queen's (Royal West Surrey) Regt., 1881; served with Burma Expedition, 1886–88 (Despatches; Brevet of Lieut.-Colonel; Medal with two clasps; created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 3 Aug. 1888]: "For services during the operations in Burma. Charles Edward Ilderton, Major, Royal West Surrey Regt"). He became Lieut.-Colonel 29 Sept. 1890, and was given the Brevet of Colonel 29 Sept. 1894; was appointed to command the 2nd Battn. The Queen's (Royal West Surrey) Regt., 1890; became Colonel, 1894, and was put on half-pay, 1894. Colonel Ilderton retired 25 March, 1886, and died 25 Jan. 1905.

FRERE, SIR BARTLE COMPTON ARTHUR, Major, Bart., was born on 24 Oct. 1854, only son of the Right Honourable Sir H. Bartle E. Frere, G.C.B., G.C.S.I. (1st Bart.), and Catherine, daughter of Lieut.-General the Right Honourable Sir George Arthur (1st Bart.). He was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, taking his B.A. degree, and was gazetted to the Rifle Brigade; served in the Zulu War in 1879 (Medal with clasp); in the Bechuanaland Expedition in 1884–85 (Brevet of Major). For his services in the Burma Campaign of 1886–88 he received the Medal and clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 3 Aug. 1888]: "For services during the operations in Burma, Sir Bartle Compton Arthur Frere, Bart., Capt. and Brevet Major, The Rifle Brigade." The Decoration was awarded for services in command of the mounted infantry of his regiment, the 1st Rifle Brigade, in the operations against the Dacoits in Upper Burma, including the pursuit and capture of Boh-Toke-Ji, a noted Dacoit chief. He succeeded his father as 2nd Baronet in 1884, and retired from the Army 6 Dec. 1893.

TRISCOTT, CHARLES PRIDEAUX, Capt., was born 2 Sept. 1857, son of the late Joseph Blake Triscott, Esq., of Plymouth and Helston. He was educated at the Royal Military Academy, and became a Lieutenant in the Royal Artillery 14 Aug. 1876. He served in Afghanistan, including the action at Charasai and the march from Kabul to Relief of Kandahar, and battle of 1 Sept. (Medal with clasp, and Bronze Star). He was promoted to Captain 15 April, 1885, and served in the Burma Campaign, 1885–88. He commanded the expedition against the Salay Hill Kachins, and also that to Lake Endawgyee and the Jade Mines; was mentioned in Despatches; received the Medal with two clasps, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 3 Aug. 1888]: "Charles Prideaux Triscott, Capt., Royal Artillery. For services during the operations in Burma, 1887–88." From 30 July, 1891, to 22 Aug. 1894, he was Instructor at the Royal Military Academy, and was promoted to Major on 27 June, 1894. He was D.A.A.G., India, from 10 Jan. 1897, to 21 April, 1898; served as A.Q.M.G. with the Tirah Expeditionary Force from 1 Oct. 1897, to 8 April, 1898 (Despatches; Medal with two clasps), and as A.A.G., India, from April, 1898, to March, 1902. He became Lieut.-Colonel in July, 1903; Brevet Colonel, 15 July, 1906, and Colonel, 15 July, 1908. In 1910 he was created a Companion of the Bath, and he was Colonel-in-Charge, Royal Garrison Artillery Records, Dover, 1 April, 1911, to 6 Aug. 1912; Temporary Brigadier-General, 7 Aug. 1912, and Officer Commanding Western Coast Defences until 27 April, 1916, when he was placed on retired pay. He was created a C.M.G. in 1917.

CAPEL CURE, HERBERT, Capt., was born 23 Oct. 1859, at Eaton Place, London, son of the late Robert Capel Cure, Esq., of Blake Hall, Ongar, Essex, by his first wife, who was a daughter of the Right Rev. George Murray, Bishop of Rochester. He was educated for the Navy, but was too ill at the time of the examination, and entered the 61st (Gloucestershire) Regt. 11 May, 1878; served in the Afghan War, 1879–80 (Medal). He was considered in the first ranks of polo players in India between 1883 and 1894. He captained the 2nd Gloucestershire (old 61st) Regimental Polo Team in India, when the regiment won the Inter-Regimental Cup; played at Lucknow in 1892, and again in 1893. He was also captain of the Gloucester team which played in the Final and lost by one point (a disputed one), and again in the Baroda Tournament—probably in the same year—which was won by the regiment. He was secretary of the Karachi Races, 1883–84, and was a winner on several occasions in these races. He also managed the Karachi and Hyderabad (Scinde) Pig-Sticking Club during the same time. He won the Guzerat Pig-Sticking Cup in 1885, was a very fine revolver shot. He became Major 4 Sept. 1895; served during the Burma Campaign, 1886–88, and for his services as Transport Officer with the Ruby Mines Column, Burma, was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 3 Aug. 1888]: "For services during operations in Burma. Herbert Capel Cure, Capt., Gloucestershire Regt." He also received the Medal with clasp, and was mentioned in Despatches for services during the operations in Burma. He served in the Boer War, 1899–1902, and was taken prisoner. He took part in the operations in Natal in 1899, including the actions at Reitfontein and Lombard's Kop, and received the Queen's Medal and clasp. He became Lieut.-Colonel 25 Oct. 1903, and was given Brevet of Colonel 25 Oct. 1906, becoming Colonel 25 Oct. 1907. He afterwards commanded his regiment. The "Times" of 21 March, 1909, says: "On 19 March, at Srinagar, Kashmir, Lieut.-Colonel H. Capel Cure, D.S.O., lately commanding 1st Battn. The Gloucestershire Regt., aged 49." Colonel Capel Cure married, in India, Mary, daughter of W. J. Angerstein, of Weeting Hall, Norfolk.

Herbert Capel Cure.

WOOD, HASTINGS ST. LEGER, Capt., was born 8 May, 1856, son of the late General Sir H. H. Wood. He entered the Army (15th Regt. of Foot) 31 Oct. 1877; became Lieutenant, East Yorkshire Regt., 30 Nov. 1878. He served in the Afghan War, 1879–80, as Brigade Transport Officer, Kandahar Field Force, taking part in the defence of Kandahar, as Orderly Officer, in the sortie of 16 Aug., and attack on the village of Deh Khoja (severely wounded, and horse killed); received Medal. He took part in the Nile Expedition, 1884–85 (Despatches [London Gazette, 25 Aug. 1885]; Medal with clasp; Khedive's Star). He served in the Burma Campaign of 1887–89 as Brigade Transport Officer, and as D.A.A. and Q.M.G., 2nd Brigade. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 3 Aug. 1888]; received the Medal and two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 3 Aug. 1888]: "For services during the operations in Burma. Hastings St. Leger Wood, Capt., East Yorkshire Regt." He became Captain 6 May, 1886, and Major 24 July, 1895. He served in the Tirah Expeditionary Force, on the Staff, 1897–98 (Despatches [London Gazette, 5 April, 1898]; Medal with two clasps). To be Companions of the Distinguished Service Order."

GATACRE, WILLIAM FORBES, Colonel, was born 3 Dec. 1843, at Herbertshire Castle, Stirlingshire, the residence of his grandmother. He was the third son of Edward Lloyd Gatacre, J.P., of Gatacre in Shropshire, and of Jessie, daughter of William Forbes, Esq., of Callendar, Stirlingshire. It is shown in Doomsday Book that the family were King's Tenants of lands of this name before the Conquest; John de Gatacre was High Sheriff in 1409, and Sir William's father held the same office in 1856. Young Gatacre entered the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, in Aug. 1860, and in Feb. 1862, was gazetted an Ensign in the 77th Foot (now the 2nd Battn. Middlesex Regt.), which he joined in India. In 1873 he passed into the Staff College, and from 1875 to 1879 was Instructor in Surveying at the Royal Military College. Later he officiated for a year as D.A.A. and Q.M.G. at Aldershot. In 1880 he returned to India with his regiment, succeeding to the command in 1884 at Secunderabad. In 1885 he was appointed D.Q.M.G. at Headquarters by Sir Frederick Roberts, Commander-in-Chief in India. It was while holding this post in 1888 that he had his first taste of active service, being appointed Chief Staff Officer to Sir John McQueen, commanding a small punitive force sent against the tribes of the Black Mountain. The little force of 8,000 men was divided into three columns; one day, in order to get in touch with Galbraith's Column in the Indus Valley, Gatacre volunteered to make his way across the mountains on foot. The mission was successfully accomplished in twenty-four hours, and as Gatacre was the only man to complete the double journey, the feat attracted considerable notice at the time. He was mentioned in Despatches, awarded the Frontier Medal with Hazara clasp, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 12 April, 1889]: "For services during the operations of Hazara. William Forbes Gatacre, Lieut.-Colonel and Colonel, Half-Pay." In 1889 Gatacre was sent to Mandalay as Brigadier-General Acting for Sir George Wolseley, and there earned another bar to his Frontier Medal. In 1890 he was given the substantive appointment of Adjutant-General, Bombay Army, with the rank of Brigadier-General, a post which he held for nearly four years under three successive Commanders-in-Chief. In Jan. 1894, he was appointed to the command of the Bombay District. The following year we find him commanding the 3rd Brigade of the Chitral Relief Force under Sir Robert Low. The object of this expedition was the relief of Surgeon-Major Robertson, who, with a small garrison, was reported to be shut up in the Fort at Chitral. Gatacre's Brigade was in reserve during the first action at the Malakand Pass; but after crossing the Panjkora River the 3rd Brigade was pushed forward, encountering some opposition at Mamugai. Shortly after this Gatacre got permission to advance rapidly up the valley with a lightly-equipped force of 500 men. The Lowari Pass was under snow, but good progress had been made when the news came through that the siege had been raised on 22 April on the approach of Colonel Kelly's Force moving southward from Gilgit. Sir R. Low's troops made their way on to the Fort, establishing such good lines of communication, as they traversed passes and valleys hitherto unknown to Englishmen, that the route then cut has become the roadway for the annual reliefs. For his part in this campaign, Gatacre received the C.B., the thanks of the Government of India, and the new Frontier Medal with clasp. Gatacre's last few months in his substantive post at Bombay were marked by a severe outbreak of bubonic plague. He presided over the commission set up to provide hospitals and to carry out precautionary measures, and before the hot weather of 1897 the situation was well in hand for that season. In August that year Gatacre came home to take up the command of an Infantry Brigade at Aldershot, but had only held the post five months when he was sent to Egypt to take command of the British Brigade which was to form part of Sir Herbert Kitchener's Expedition for the recovery of Khartoum. Soon after his arrival at Railhead, Gatacre was summoned by the Sirdar to bring his troops by forced marches to Berber. On Good Friday, 8 April, 1898, a fierce and effective action took place with the Dervish Army on the banks of the Atbara, in which the British Brigade took a prominent part. The advance on Omdurman was planned for the early autumn, but before the move began, the arrival of another brigade of British troops had raised Gatacre's command to a division, and he was given the permanent rank of Major-General. The Battle of Omdurman was fought on 1 Sept., and Khartoum was occupied next day. In recognition of his services Gatacre was gazetted K.C.B., and received from the Khedive the Order of the Medjidie, Second Class. His name appears next to Lord Kitchener's in the Vote of Thanks in both Houses of Parliament. A new British Medal for Egypt was issued for all ranks, and an Egyptian one was received from the Khedive. In Oct. 1899, the British Government dispatched a force under Sir Redvers Buller, V.C., as a reply to the invasion of Natal and Cape Colony by the Boers from the Transvaal and Orange River Free State. Gatacre was gazetted to the 3rd Division, with the temporary rank of Lieut.-General. The three Divisional Commanders sailed in the same ship, but at Cape Town a new distribution of the troops was made, in order to meet pressure at certain points, by which Gatacre's command was reduced to two battalions, with Headquarters at Queenstown. To this half-brigade were added certain hastily raised volunteers, but it must be remembered that Gatacre's force, while in theory a complete division, never at any time reached a fully-equipped brigade of infantry, and that he never had any regular artillery or cavalry. All three columns were unfortunate in their first contact with the enemy. At Magersfontein, on 11 Dec., the casualties were 948 out of 14,964 troops engaged; at Colenso the casualties were 1,139 out of a force of 19,378; at Stormberg, the loss in killed and wounded was 135 with 571 missing, out of a total of 3,035 engaged. In none of these engagements were the recently landed British troops able to gain their objective, but in no case was ground lost. The Official History of the War says: "Sir William Gatacre's decision to advance on Stormberg was fully justified by the strategical position. General Buller's telegram, although it left him a free hand in time and opportunity, had suggested that operation. The plan, though bold, was sound in its design, and would have succeeded had not exceptional misfortune attended its execution" (Vol. I., page 301). After the arrival of Lord Roberts in Bloemfontein in March, 1900, with large reinforcements, Gatacre's troops were employed to distribute Peace Proclamations behind the front line of defence at the express command of the Commander-in-Chief. As a consequence of the unfortunate affair at Sanna's Post, in which the Boers got possession of the Bloemfontein Waterworks, Gatacre's peace patrols were exposed to attack. One little group of colonials held on finely at Wepener until relieved; but in the process of withdrawal a small British force, about 190 rifles, was overtaken at Reddersburg, and surrendered an hour before assistance reached them. After this incident Sir William Gatacre returned to England, but was reinstated in his command of the Eastern District. Extraordinary demonstrations of affection greeted his return, notably at Colchester and Norwich. His noble bearing, silence, and high sense of duty impressed those who came in contact with him, and his influence among all ranks was always for good. In 1905 Sir William's love of adventure and of the East led him to join an expedition to report on the rubber fields of Abyssinia. He died of fever near Gambela, 18 Jan. 1906, aged 62. Sir William Gatacre was twice married; two sons survived him, Major W. E. Gatacre, K.O.Y.L.I., and Capt. J. K. Gatacre, 11th Bengal Lancers, killed in action in France 12 Oct. 1914.

Sir Ian Hamilton wrote: "General Gatacre was one of the hardest working men I ever struck, whether at his desk as D.Q.M.G. in India, or on horseback, or on his own legs. In the Chitral Campaign and in Egypt, he well justified the name which the soldiers affectionately bestowed upon him of General Backacher. As to Stormberg, I think it was very largely the case of that fickle jade called the Fortune of War. Without entering into controversy or detail, I think it will be generally admitted by those who have studied the matter, that General Gatacre's luck was dead out on that occasion."

Colonel Ronald Brooke, D.S.O., writes of Sir William Gatacre: "I was with him in Chitral, 1895, and in the Sudan, 1898, also at Colchester, 1899, for a short period. His boundless energy and determination to succeed in whatever he took up were the dominant features in his character. He was an extremely brave man, and once, at some hill station in India (I am not sure which), a native sepoy had run amok with his rifle, shooting several prople. He took up his stand in the centre of an open space and threatened to kill anyone who approached him. General Gatacre, who was then, I think, a Colonel, arrived on the scene, and immediately walked straight up to the man, ordering him to hand over his rifle. The man had only one cartridge left, and, instead of killing Gatacre, he blew his own brains out. Had he still been in possession of two cartridges he would undoubtedly have killed Gatacre first of all. At the Atbara, General Gatacre accompanied the attacking force, and when the leading line hesitated to face the heavy fire and make a break in the zareba which surrounded the dervish entrenchments and stockade, General Gatacre, to my horror, stepped in front of the leading men, who continued firing vigorously at the enemy round his body, and pulled the first thorn-branch out. This gave the men the lead they required; they rushed forward, tore away the brush fence, and we were shortly inside the entrenchments. General Gatacre, after setting this example, at once retired behind his leading men, and went to our left flank, which he considered might be attacked by Osman's cavalry, which we had seen withdrawing out of the enemy's entrenchments just before we attacked and heading up the River Atbara beyond our left. The General was criticized unfavourably afterwards for unnecessarily endangering his own life, but in my opinion a leader should be where he is most required, and at the Battle of the Atbara, General Gatacre carried out the axiom. He unceasingly exerted himself to ensure the comfort of his officers and men in the Sudan Campaign of 1898, and, owing to his efforts during several months, he at last succeeded in obtaining a daily jam ration for everyone. This had never been given before, and it was solely owing to his exertions that this excellent custom was instituted, and the fact that rations have ever since included jam proves how right he was. He was clever at sketching and drawing, and took an immense interest in everything he undertook. During the Chitral Campaign he brought an official photographer with him (a Sergeant-Major in the Royal Engineers), who took excellent photos of the country. He also collected specimens of every flower we saw, and thus, although he knew nothing about botany, he succeeded in obtaining some rare and valuable plants, and adding to the knowledge of plant life on the frontier."

The author of an article, "Campaigning with Kitchener," in "Blackwood," for Dec. 1902, says, when describing the Battle of the Atbara: "When the fighting folk had had their say, the looters had a merry time, and many a battle relic that now hangs in hall and cottage was garnered by those anxious for a memento of the day. K. was dictating his despatch to the Queen when there passed in front of us a pony led by a syce, and laden with spoils selected from that field of plenty with the praiseworthy discrimination of an art connoisseur. K. hailed the man, and, selecting the finest coat of mail and the most beautifully finished spear, bade me take it to General Gatacre with his warmest thanks for the splendid gallantry and good judgment with which he had led his fine brigade. I seem to see now the pleasant light that shone in that brave soldier's eyes as I gave him the message word for word. Gatacre! What a splendid fellow, and how willingly any of us, whom he worked to death in the Sudan, would have given our right hands to save him from the fate that befell him—at the hands of his own chiefs—in South Africa. He taught us, in Chitral, the Sudan and South Africa, two great lessons: first, never to make difficulties; secondly, never to complain of any hard knocks of fate, and to take the rough and the smooth things of life as they came. Oh, you poor deluded British public, will you never distinguish between the real men and the dummies?"

The following is contributed: "No bare record of the posts which Gatacre held can give any idea of his personality. There can be no question of the influence for good on his generation; all those who were closely associated with him felt his power and his charm: his modesty was almost as surprising as his capacity for work, and his gentleness as arresting as his stern sense of duty. It was said of Gatacre that he was born out of due time, that he ought to have been one of Cromwell's Ironsides; indeed, he was an enthusiast, a man of clear vision and exalted ideals, and a physique that never failed his will. But he was also an artist, and loved mountains and storms, and the desert and the night with a poet's affection for nature unspoilt by man. Though deeply beloved by his friends, he did not shine in general society, and when an adverse fate drove him into retirement, he regretted leaving the Army because the Army had been his field of activity, but it cost him little to leave 'the world.' He became one of 'the great silent men.' I suppose that very few men now know whether there is a sound explanation of his return from South Africa; most of the actors in that mystery-play are now underground. But retirement did not quench Gatacre's 'will to work'; he sought a new field for his activities: he returned to the desert which he loved, to the Egypt that had given him his great day at the Atbara. He sought solace there and found it. His death, while on a shooting expedition, was in the spirit of the Viking warriors of old, whose instinct led them to sail away alone in a ship when they knew that their hour was come. Gatacre was a solitary figure in life and in death."

O'GRADY-HALY, RICHARD HEBDEN, Lieut.-Colonel, was born 22 Feb. 1841, at Tunbridge Wells, eldest son of the late General Sir William O'Grady-Haly, K.C.B., and of Harriette, daughter of H. Hebden, Esq., of Ely Grange, Tunbridge Wells. He was educated at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and joined the Army 6 Nov. 1858. He married in 1865, Geraldine Mary, youngest daughter of Major-General Gostling, R.A., and Mary, daughter of John Easpard Le Marchant, Major-General (founder of Sandhurst College). Their children are: Ethel Mary Gertrude, Mabel Violet (married, 1899, Robert Balmain Low, eldest son of Sir Robert Low, G.C.B.), and Hilda Fanshawe. General O'Grady-Haly was A.D.C. to General Atherley in Malta, 1863; became Captain, 1866; was A.D.C. to Sir Hastings Doyle in Canada, 1870; was A.D.C. to his father, Sir William O'Grady-Haly, in Canada, 1874–78; became Major, 1879; entered the Staff College, 1880; served with the Egyptian Expedition, 1882; Action of El Maffar; both actions at Kassassin, and Battle of Tel-el-Kebir (Despatches; Medal with clasp; Bronze Star, and Brevet of Lieut.-Colonel, 1882); with the Hazara Field Force, 1888, in command of the Second Column; was mentioned in Despatches, G.G.O., 978 of 88; received the Medal and clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 12 April 1889]: "For services during the operations of Hazara. Richard O'Grady-Haly, Lieut.-Colonel and Colonel, The Suffolk Regt." The Insignia were presented to him by Queen Victoria. He commanded the 1st Battn. 12th Suffolk Regt. in India; was A.A.G. in Belfast from 1891 to 1896; he was in command of Canadian Militia, 1900 to 1902, and was in command while H.R.H. The Duke of York made his visit to Canada. He held the appointment of Inspector of Warlike Stores for Canada from 1904 to 1911. Major-General O'Grady-Haly died 8 July, 1911. He was a beautiful draughtsman, and wrote several official books while at the Intelligence Department, London. He was a good horseman and a first-class fisherman.

MURRAY, ANDREW, Colonel, was born 6 June, 1837, in Edinburgh, son of Andrew Murray, Esq., Junior Advocate, Edinburgh, and Mary Stewart. He joined the Edinburgh County Militia in 1855; became Ensign, 60th Foot, 7 Feb. 1858, and was transferred to the 78th Highlanders 19 Feb. 1858; became Lieutenant, 16 Aug. 1861; Captain, 2 Oct, 1866, and Brevet Major, 16 Jan. 1880. He served with the 78th Highlanders in the Afghan War in 1880 (Medal); in the Egyptian War, 1882, in command of the detachments, 2nd Seaforth Highlanders, and was present at the Battle of Tel-el-Kebir (Medal and clasp; Fourth Class Osmanieh, and Khedive's Star). He became Major, 1 July, 1881; Lieut.-Colonel, 27 March, 1883, and Colonel, 27 March, 1887. In the Hazara Campaign in 1888, he was in command of a Reserve Column. He later commanded the Second Advance Column until the conclusion of the campaign. He received a Medal, was twice mentioned in Despatches, once by General G. N. Brigades, 1914–16, as Temporary Brigadier-General in the Southern and Northern commands. He married, in 1909, Alice Evelyn (died 1916), daughter of the Rev. John Fleming, M.A., of Edinburgh. He voluntarily retired on retired pay 17 Sept. 1916 (Despatches, Honorary Brigadier-General). He was granted a Distinguished Service Pension.

Francis John Pink.

O'DONNELL, HUGH, Capt., was born 9 Feb. 1858, at Jubbulpore, Central Provinces, India, son of John Walter O'Donnell, C.E., P.W.D., and Rosabella O'Donnell. He was educated privately in Germany; at Streatham School, and at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and began his military career 30 Jan. 1878, as an Ensign in the 1st Battn. 8th King's Regt. In the following year he volunteered for active service in the Zulu War, and joined the 24th Regt. He received the South African Medal and clasp, and received a letter of thanks from the War Office through the Quartermaster-General from H.R.H. Commanding-in-Chief: "For a sketch made by order of O.C. detachment of 24th Regt. of the track taken by the fugitives from Isandlwhana, 1879, from which information was gained." In July, 1880, he entered the Bengal Staff Corps, and was posted to the 44th Gurkha Rifles, and was successively Quartermaster and Adjutant of that regiment. In Aug. 1886, he received orders to raise a Police Levy for service in Burma, and in Jan. 1887, was appointed Commandant of Military Police for Upper Burma, and held this appointment from then to 1891. He was with the Mogoung Field Force, 1887–88, and commanded it (under Brigadier-General G. B. Wolseley, C.B.), 1888–89, for which he received mention in Despatches and the thanks of the Government of India; and was in the Tonhon Expedition of 1889–90, and with the Wuntho Field Force, 1891. He was mentioned in Despatches by Sir George White, K.C.B., V.C.: "For his conduct while in command of the Column operating against the rebellious Kachin tribes round and beyond Mogoung;" received the Burmese Medal with three clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 12 Nov. 1889]: "Hugh O'Donnell, Capt., Bengal Staff Corps. In recognition of services during the late operations in Burma." In 1892 he rejoined his old regiment, the 44th Gurkha Rifles, as Major and Second in Command. In 1899 he was transferred, as Commandant of the 42nd Gurkha Rifles. In 1904 he returned to his old regiment, the 44th Gurkha Rifles, now renamed the 6th Gurkha Rifles, as Commandant, and was granted a year's extension and appointed A.A.G., 1st Peshawar Division, then A.A.G. for musketry to the Northern Army from 1907 to 1910. At the end of that period he again got another extension for a year, and was appointed Colonel on the Staff; and later Brigadier-General Commanding Bannu Brigade, North-West Frontier, Jan. 1911, receiving in the same year the commendation of the Commander-in-Chief on his successful operations against the Britiani Khels, and later against the Hathi Khels. He was Brigade Commander, Jan. 1912, Major-General, Bannu Brigade, April, 1912. He received a letter signifying the full approval from the Commander-in-Chief of the operations of the Bannu Movable Column in the Tochi Valley in April, 1913. At the Coronation Durbar at Delhi he commanded the 20th Brigade, and was invested with the C.B. at the Durbar by the King in person. In 1913 he was made Colonel, 6th Gurkha Rifles. In the Great War he commanded the Bannu Movable Column in the field in successful operations against Khostwal tribesmen, and at Spina Khaisora the enemy was driven over the frontier. After these operations the Viceroy and Commander-in-Chief commended the able manner in which they were carried out by General O'Donnell. Three weeks later, in Feb. 1915, General O'Donnell was suddenly taken ill, from exposure in very inclement weather while with the Column. He was put on sick leave, arriving in England in April, 1916. Although he greatly improved in health, he never became fit for active service, and failed to be accepted when he offered to work in any capacity during the late War. His death occurred unexpectedly in Dec. 1917, while on a visit to friends at Cromhall, Gloucestershire. He was buried at Halton, Lancashire. He had a strong and commanding personality, and his profession was his supreme interest in life. He was an enthusiast at cricket, a fine tennis and billiard player, also a photographer in his spare time. He married, in 1894, Susan, daughter of T. G. Garnett, J.P., of Shefferlands, Halton, Lancashire. She and their only son died in 1908.

Hugh O'Donnell.

JACKSON, SYDNEY CHARLES FISHBURN, Lieut., was born at Dedham Grove, near Colchester, 21 April, 1863, son of the late Commander W. T. F. Jackson, R.N. He was educated at Wellington, and at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and was gazetted to the Royal Irish Rifles 9 Sept. 1882; transferred to the Hampshire Regt. 11 Oct. 1882. He served throughout the Burma Campaign, 1885–89, and was A.D.C. to the G.O.C., Upper Burma Field Force, 4 Sept. 1886, to 31 March, 1889; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 2 Sept. 1887, and 15 Nov. 1889]; received the Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 12 Nov. 1889]: "Sydney Charles Fishburn Jackson, Lieut., The Hampshire Regt., Aide-de-Camp to Major-General, Bengal. In recognition of services during the late operations in Burma." He was A.D.C. to Major-General, Bengal, 1 April, 1889, to 7 April, 1893; was promoted to Captain 1 July, 1890. In 1890 he took part in the operations of the Zhob Valley Field Force, as A.D.C. to the G.O.C. He was A.D.C. to the Commander-in-Chief, East Indies, 8 April, 1893, to 12 April, 1894; was Station Staff Officer, 1st Class, India, 21 April, 1897, to 9 July, 1897; D.A.A.G., Headquarters, Bombay, 10 July, 1897, to 20 April, 1902; D.A.A. and Q.M.G., 6th Division, 1906–10; A.Q.M.G., Eastern Command Headquarters, 1 Dec. 1917, to 27 April, 1918; A.A. and Q.M.G., Gibraltar, 3 June, 1918 to date. He served with the Zhob Field Force; and also with the Somaliland Field Force, 1903–4, in command of detachment, Hampshire Regt. (Despatches [London Gazette, 2 Sept. 1904], Medal with two clasps, Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel). Colonel Jackson served in the European War in 1914 and 1915, commanding the 1st Battn. Hampshire Regt., and was severely wounded. He was mentioned in Despatches 19 Oct. 1914; decorated with C.M.G. 1 Jan. 1919; Mons Star with clasp "1914"; British War Medal and Victory Medal. His favourite recreations are hunting, golf and rowing. In 1898 Colonel Jackson married Lucy Beatrice, second daughter of the late Sir W. H. Drake K.C.B., and they have two sons.

FOWLER, FRANCIS JOHN, Lieut., was born 31 July, 1864, at Mian Mir, India, son of Deputy Surgeon-General Henry Day Fowler (deceased), Army Medical Staff, and of Caroline Mary Fowler (neé Oliver) (who died 3 Jan. 1919). He was educated at King William's College, Isle of Man; at Bedford Modern School, and at Sandhurst; became Lieutenant, North Lancashire Regt., 25 Aug. 1883; served in the Zhob Valley Expedition in 1884, and was transferred to the Indian Staff Corps 13 Nov. 1885. He served in the Burmese Expedition, 1887–8–9; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette (G.G.O. 613, of 29 Nov. 1889)], for services in Upper Burma; received the Frontier Medal and clasp for Burma, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 12 Nov. 1889]: "Francis John Fowler, Lieut., Bombay Staff Corps. In recognition of services in the late Expedition to Burma."

Francis John Fowler.

The St. James's Gazette of 5 July, 1888, says:

"The recapture of Monè from the rebel leader, Twek-nga-lu, in the beginning of May is a good example of what rapid and determined action will do with a semi-civilized enemy. The relieving party, under Colonel Sartorius, of the 1st Beloochees, started at daybreak, in a downpour of rain, from a village in the hills to the west of Monè. About two miles from the town, Mr. Scott, the Assistant-Superintendent of the Shan States, with Lieut. Fowler, of the Beloochees, and six men of the Rifle Brigade, mounted on officers' ponies, went off from the main column to make a dash on the palace. Mr Scott had been in Monè several times before, and was able to take the party by a jungle path round the south of the town. From there they galloped straight on the palace, disregarding the armed men in the streets. The eastern gate was fortunately ajar, so that it was not necessary to dismount. The clatter of the hoofs brought Twek-nga-lu to a window. Mr. Scott knew him by sight, and, with the assistance of a soldier, had the rebel tied to his own bedpost within two minutes of entering the palace enclosure, which is over a hundred yards square and full of detached houses. Twek-nga-lu had a repeating rifle loaded with sixteen cartridges lying by his bedside, but had not time to seize it. The four gates were then closed and guarded by one man each, and another guarded Twek-nga-lu. Mr. Scott and Mr. Fowler, with the corporal of the party, then went to meet the bodyguard of twenty men, all armed with guns. Mr. Scott demanded the name of the leader, who proved to be Twek-nga-lu's chief fighting-man. He then announced who he was, and called on them in Shan to sit down, advancing all the time. Kun-sang, the leader, refused; whereupon Mr. Scott promptly knocked him down, seized the gun of the man behind him, and shouted out that he would shoot anyone who did not sit down immediately. The corporal and Mr. Fowler each covered his man as he came on. Before the Shans could realize the situation five had been disarmed and the rest then gave in. Messrs. Scott and Fowler collected all the guns and swords, the corporal kneeling in the Hythe position, ready to fire. In five minutes the palace was completely in their hands, and the main column was heard firing to the north of the town. A quarter of an hour later they marched into the palace and found everything settled, Twek-nga-lu bound and his chief leaders under guard. When it is considered that the town was held by 400 men and that the force inside the palace outnumbered the capturing party by nearly ten to one, the affair may be considered as successful an example of prompt daring as is to be found out of a lady's romance. The capture of Twek-nga-lu is likely to have the most satisfactory results. The disturbances which broke out in the Southern Shan States during April were mainly due to his advance and his intrigues, and now that he and his chief leaders have been captured the complete establishment of peace may be anticipated. The interest of our readers in this story will not be diminished when we add that Mr. Scott was the writer of the amusing and informing articles about Burma which appeared over the signature, 'Shway Yoe,' in the 'St. James's Budget' some time ago."

The above was also published in the "St. James's Budget," 7 July, 1888.

An extract from another paper runs as follows:

"The Baluchis have come out with their full share of honours for the campaign, and richly, from all accounts, they deserve what they have got. Besides the V.C. given to Dr. Crimmim, and the Distinguished Service Order to Capt. Sinclair for his services in the Nyingyan district, the decoration of C.B. has been bestowed upon Colonel George Sartorius, the commandant, the Distinguished Service Order going to Lieut. Fowler and Lieut. Tighe. Thus the 1st Baluchis gained five decorations during the two and a half years which they spent in Burmah. Work such as that which Colonel Sartorius had to do for the greater part of two years would test the ingenuity, the fertility of resource, and the patience of any commander. Lieut. Fowler distinguished himself by a very smart night surprise of the free-booter Twet Nga Sa, whom, with the help of half a dozen men of the Rifle Brigade, he seized in bed. His other exploit was an attack upon a stockade south of Mankine, in which the enemy were beaten by a small force of eighty men, leaving behind them one hundred and fifty killed and wounded. Lieut. Tighe did equally meritorious service in the advance on Saulou, the Karen capital. The Bombay Army has shown by its services in Burmah how cruel and unjustifiable are the aspersions sometimes cast upon it."

A Bedford paper says:

"Lieut. Fowler, the officer referred to in the following extract from a Kurachi paper of 7 Oct. last, is a son of Dr. Fowler, of Waldeck Avenue, and was educated in the Bedford Modern School: 'The troops in garrison paraded this morning at seven o'clock on the general parade ground, behind the Native Infantry lines, under the command of Brigadier-General Boyce-Combe, for the purpose of conferring the Distinguished Service Order on Lieut. Fowler, 1st Belooch Battn. Light Infantry. After the General had been received with the usual salute, the troops formed three sides of a square, and Lieut. Fowler was called to the front. The General then made a speech, in which he described how this gallant young officer, in the winter of 1888, being in command of a detachment of eighty of the 1st Baluchis, marched all night through a pouring rain, and having traversed twenty-five miles, surprised at daybreak a party of Shans 500 strong occupying seven stockades. Lieut. Fowler, after pouring in a well-directed volley, led the rush of his men on the enemy's position. In a few minutes the Shans had fled, leaving eighty of their number killed. The General extolled the prompt gallantry of Lieut. Fowler, and expressed his belief that all the subaltern officers present would behave as well under similar circumstances. He then handed the Cross of the Order to Lieut. Fowler, and the proceedings terminated with the usual march past.'"

He became Captain 25 Aug. 1894, and again saw active service in Uganda in 1897–98, being present at the action at Jeruba. He was mentioned in Despatches; received the Brevet of Major 4 Oct. 1899, and the East and Central Africa Medal with two clasps. He served in China, 1900–1 (Medal). On 22 Jan. 1901, he was promoted to Major; on 28 Jan. 1907, to Lieutenant-Colonel, and on 6 May, 1911, to Colonel. From 1908 to 1910 he commanded troops in Somaliland (Medal and clasp). Colonel Fowler was A.Q.M.G., India, 19 Dec. 1913, to 18 Nov. 1914. He was Temporary Brigadier-General 19 Nov. 1914, to 11 Feb. 1916; commanded the Derajat Brigade from 19 Nov. 1914, to 13 Feb. 1916. He was created C.B., [London Gazette, 1 Jan. 1916]. Joined the Mesopotamia Expeditionary Force in Feb. 1916, in command of a brigade; was wounded on 8 March, 1916, and invalided in Sept. 1916; commanded the Poona Divisional Area from 1 Dec. 1916; commanded at Kurachi. Major-General F. J. Fowler married, on 8 June, 1896, at Godalming, Surrey, Rita Mary, daughter of the late Colonel G. Sartorius, C.B., Indian Army. He retired 1 Jan. 1921.

TIGHE, MICHAEL JOSEPH, Lieut., was born 21 May, 1864, at Trincomalee, Ceylon, eldest son of Major Michael Joseph Tighe, 70th Regt. (deceased). He was educated at a private school, and at Sandhurst, and joined the 1st Battn. The Leinster Regt. 25 Aug. 1883, and the Indian Staff Corps 27 June, 1885. He served in the Burmese War, 1886–89, with the Mounted Infantry (Medal with clasp); with the Red Karen Expedition in 1889; served with the Mounted Infantry; was mentioned in Despatches 15 Nov. 1889, and received a clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 12 Nov. 1889]: "In recognition of services during the late operations in Burma. Michael Joseph Tighe, Lieut., Bombay Staff Corps." The D.S.O was awarded for personal gallantry at the action of Niza Kaing 1 June, 1899, when in command of the M.I. of the A.G. to Sir N. Collet's Force (Field operations, Burma, General Orders, No. 17, 6 May, 1889): "In this action the M.I., under Lieut. Tighe, attacked and destroyed the Karen Force at Niza Kaing; this officer himself killed eight of the enemy in the hand-to-hand fighting." He served with the Chin-Lushai Expedition in 1890 (clasp); Chin Hills Expedition, 1890–92, as Political Officer (two clasps). He became Captain 25 Aug. 1894. He served in East Africa, 1895–96; operations against the Mazrin Arabs, also with the Naval Brigade in operation on the coast (Medal and Brilliant Star of Zanzibar awarded for distinguished service before the enemy); Ufunda, 1897–99; operations against the Wa Zeita; operations against the Soudanese Mutineers (Despatches, Medal and clasp, Brevet Major, 4 Oct. 1899); Mikron Expedition and operations in East Persia in 1901; storm and capture of Wadisfort, in command; Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel. 1902 he accompanied the Indian Contingent at King Edward's Coronation (Medal); in 1911 commanded Indian Contingent at Coronation of King George V. (C.I.S. and Medal); in 1911 awarded C.B.; in European War, 1914, commanded Composite Brigade, British East Africa; commanded Expeditionary Force, B.E.F., in operations against the Germans up to 1 April, 1918. He was promoted Major-General for Distinguished Service in the Field 3 June, 1915; awarded K.C.M.G. 28 March, 1916. He married in London, 14 June, 1900, Katherine Helen Mackay, daughter of the late Mackay Hugh Bailie Scott, and they have one son, Valentine Michael Vincent, born 14 Feb. 1904.

London Gazette, 22 Feb. 1890.—"War Office, 22 Feb. 1890. The Queen has been graciously pleased to give orders for the appointment of the undermentioned Officer to be a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order. For the operations against the slave traders at Foulah Town and its vicinity on the West Coast of Africa."

LENDY, EDWARD AUGUSTUS ARMSTRONG, Lieut., was gazetted to the West India Regt. 21 Dec. 1887. He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 22 Feb. 1890]: "Edward Augustus William Lendy, Lieut., West India Regt. For the operations against the slave traders at Foulah Town and its vicinity on the West Coast of Africa." He was promoted to Captain, and died 23 Dec. 1893.

London Gazette, 25 Feb. 1890.—"War Office, 25 Feb. 1890. The Queen has been graciously pleased to give orders for the appointment of the undermentioned Officer to be a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order. For the action at Toski."

MACDONALD, HECTOR ARCHIBALD, Capt., was born at Rootfield in the parish of Urquhart, in Ross-shire, the youngest of five sons of William Macdonald, a Crofter and Stonemason. At the age of fifteen Hector Macdonald was apprenticed to a Draper at Dingwall. Here he joined the Inverness-shire Highland Rifle Volunteers, and acquired that passion for soldiering which was destined to determine his future career. In June, 1870, he left his employer without giving notice, and enlisted in the 92nd Regt., now the 2nd Battn. Gordon Highlanders, and soon afterwards he sailed for India. Within three years he was Colour-Sergeant of his company, and in 1879 the 92nd Highlanders formed part of General Roberts's small force which marched to Kabul to avenge the massacre of Cavagnari and the rest of the British Mission. On the 27th Sept. Macdonald showed skill and energy in driving the enemy from Hazardaraki Pass, near Karatiga, thus enabling Sir F. Roberts to continue his march to Kushi. Together with Jemadar Sher Mahomed—3rd Sikhs—he again distinguished himself at the action at Charasiah on the 6th Oct. following, when he dislodged a picquet which was causing much annoyance by its fire. On both occasions Macdonald was mentioned in Despatches. After the occupation of Kabul, he took part in the Maidan Expedition; the operations round Kabul in Dec. 1879, including the affair at Shapur Cantonments, the attack on Takt-i-Shah, the engagement of Childukran, and the second action at Charasiah, and accompanied Lord Roberts on the march from Kabul to Kandahar in Aug. 1880. He was present at the reconnaissance of 31 Aug., and at the battle of 1 Sept., and distinguished himself at the capture of Ayub Khan's Camp at Babawati. "His dash and prowess in the field, which won him the sobriquet of 'Fighting Mac,' led General Roberts to promote him at Kabul to the rank of Second Lieutenant in the Gordon Highlanders." His commission was ratified on 7 Jan. 1880, when his claymore was presented to him by his brother officers. For his services in this campaign Macdonald received the Afghan Medal with three clasps, the Bronze Decoration, and was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 16 Jan. 1880]. The 92nd Highlanders returned home, but Macdonald was landed with two companies in Natal to join in Sir G. Colley's ill-fated attempt to relieve the garrison in the Transvaal. Macdonald was taken prisoner at Majuba (1881), but his gallantry so impressed Joubert that he gave him back his sword. He was again mentioned in Despatches. The year 1883 saw a new phase in Macdonald's career, when he served in the Egyptian Constabulary under Sir Valentine Baker in 1883; took part in the Nile Expedition in 1885; was Garrison Adjutant at Assiout from 22 Jan. to 5 June, 1885. After the failure of the British Expedition and the British retreat, Macdonald was transferred to the Egyptian Army, and helped with its reorganization. He was promoted Captain in 1888, and made the 9th Sudanese as much like Highlanders as he possibly could, and the Sudan Campaign of 1888–91 tested the Highlanders-Sudanese, and they stood the test triumphantly. Capt. Macdonald was engaged in the operations round Suakin, the action at Gemaizah, at Toski on 3 Aug. 1889, and at the capture of Tokar 19 Feb. 1891. He was mentioned in Despatches 11 Jan. 1888; received the Medal and clasp, the Third Class Medjidie and the Khedive's Star for Suakin, 1888, and was mentioned in Despatches 6 Sept. 1889, for Suakin (1889), received a clasp, and for his services at Toski was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 25 Feb. 1890]: "For the action at Toski. Hector Archibald Macdonald, Capt., Gordon Highlanders." For the capture of Tokar he received the Third Class Osmanieh and a Clasp to the Khedive's Star. He was promoted Major 17 July, 1891, and attached to the 7th Royal Fusiliers whilst remaining in Egypt. In 1896 Lord Kitchener began his reconquest of the Sudan, and Macdonald was given command of the 2nd Infantry Brigade in the Expedition to Dongola. He was conspicuous in the actions of Farket (7 June) and Hafir (19 Sept.), and was given the Brevet of Lieut.-Colonel 18 Nov. 1896, and received the Egyptian Medal with two clasps. He took part in the Nile Expedition of 1897–98, and commanded the Egyptian Brigade at the action of Abu Hamed (Despatches [London Gazette, 25 Jan. 1898], and two clasps), and at Atbara, 8 April, 1898 (Despatches [London Gazette, 24 May, 1898]). At the Battle of Omdurman, 2 Sept. 1898, Macdonald reached the zenith of his career when he wheeled his brigade round in a complete half-circle, half-battalion by half-battalion, to meet a sudden and unexpected attack by dervishes. He was mentioned in Despatches, 20 Sept. 1898; created a C.B. 22 June, 1897; appointed A.D.C. to the Queen; given the Brevet of Colonel 16 Nov. 1898; received two clasps, and was thanked by both Houses of Parliament. From 24 Oct. 1899, to 3 Jan. 1900, he was Brigadier-General in India, commanding the Sirhind District, with Headquarters at Umballa. On relinquishing this command he was promoted Major-General. On the death of General Wauchope, 10 Dec. 1899, at Magersfontein, Major-General Macdonald was summoned to South Africa to take command of the Highland Brigade. He arrived at Modder River in the end of Jan. 1900; seized Koodoosberg Drift, 5–8 Feb. 1900, and thus prepared the way for the relief of Kimberley. A few days later he led the brigade in the historic march to Bloemfontein. He was present at the operations at Paardeberg (16–27 Feb. 1900), which led to the surrender of Cronje, and was wounded in the ankle; twice mentioned in Despatches and created a K.C.B. He recovered from his wound sufficiently to rejoin his brigade a month later, and took part in General Colville's march to Lindley and Heilbron, with several severely contested actions on the way. For the next two months he was engaged in the operations which ended in Prinsloo's surrender. The Highland Brigade was then broken up, and Sir Hector Macdonald directed various bodies of troops, first in the south-east of Orange River Colony, and from the beginning of 1901 in Aliwal North. A few months later he was given command of the Belgaum district of Southern India. After a visit to Australia, he was transferred to the command of the forces in Ceylon. Rumours got about that he would have to face a court-martial, and Sir Hector Macdonald was given leave of absence and came home—it was believed—to prepare his defence. He shot himself in Paris 25 March, 1903, having served thirty-three years in the Army, nine of them in the ranks.

His appointment to the Distinguished Service Order was gazetted 2 Jan. 1891: "In recognition of services during the late operations against the Sultanate of Witu. James Hamilton Martin, Fleet Surgeon, Royal Navy." He was promoted to Inspector-General, 1 Jan. 1900.

London Gazette, 30 May, 1891.—"The Queen has been graciously pleased to give orders for the following appointments to the Distinguished Service Order."

BENBOW, HENRY, Chief Engineer, R.N., was born in London 5 Sept. 1838, son of James Benbow, of Thornton Heath, Surrey, and his wife, Caroline (née Parrey); educated at a private school; entered the Royal Navy as Assistant Engineer, 1861; became Chief Engineer, 1879; served in Nile Expedition for relief of General Gordon, 1884–85, being attached as Chief Engineer to the Naval Brigade, under the command of Lord Charles Beresford, in connection with river steam-boat flotilla. The Naval Brigade did not accompany General Stewart, but crossed the desert later, and was not at the Battle of Abu Klea. A desperate effort, in which Colonel Fred Burnaby was killed, was made to save General Gordon before the fall of Khartoum. The Expedition reached the Nile at Gubat. Here it was met by four little steamers sent down by General Gordon from Khartoum. Sir Charles Wilson, with a score of British soldiers and 260 Soudanese troops, started off at once for Khartoum in two of the steamers. On 1 Feb. 1885, Lieut. Stuart Wortley brought down word that General Gordon was dead, that Khartoum had fallen, and that Sir Charles Wilson's two steamers had been wrecked thirty miles up river. Lord Charles Beresford started to the rescue on the Safia, which had originally been a "penny steamboat" on the Thames, with Benbow and a crew of bluejackets, a few picked soldier marksmen, two Gardner guns, and two brass four-pounder Egyptian mountain guns on board. The Safia was old, and could only make two and a half knots per hour against the stream. The following morning they had to pass the fort of Wad-el-Habeshi, where three heavy Krupp guns were mounted, with 5,000 dervishes well entrenched, while a quarter of a mile further on could be seen the wreck of one of Sir Charles Wilson's steamers and the island on which he and his men had taken refuge. By concentrating machine-gun fire on the embrasures, they ran the gauntlet, and had passed some two hundred yards up stream, when a shot from the fort pierced the crazy vessel's boiler, killing or scalding all the engine-room hands except one leading stoker, Royal Navy. The way on the boat enabled it to be headed across and anchored on the opposite shore. Although the dash across the desert had been carried out in the lightest possible order, Chief Engineer Benbow had brought with him the necessary plates, bolts, nuts, tools, etc., for dealing with such an emergency. With his own hands he cut out and bent a new plate sixteen inches by fourteen inches, drilled the holes, cut the threads of the screws on bolts and nuts, and after some ten hours' work standing in water, he was able to report that the job was done. During all this time bullets pattered continually on the hull, some of them piercing it and striking the wounded who lay below, and any moment a shell might have burst into the engine-room. At 5 a.m. the fires were lit with the utmost caution and steam got up. The guns of the fort were safely eluded, Sir Charles Wilson's party picked up, and the whole expedition brought back to Gubat. The plate is now in the Museum of the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, having been cut out and sent home some fifteen years later by Lord Kitchener. In his official report, Lord Charles Beresford stated: "Too much credit cannot be given to this officer." Lord Charles Beresford, in his Memoirs, writes: "He ought to have received the V.C., but owing to the fact that I did not know that the decoration could be granted for a service of that nature, I did not, to my great regret, recommend him for that honour." On the return to Korti, Mr. Benbow was specially complimented on parade for his skill and bravery by Lord Wolseley, who presented him with his cigarette-case. Sent to England shortly after to prepare special light-draft steamers. Specially mentioned by Lord Wolseley in Despatches; received the Medal and clasp, and Khedive's Bronze Star. On the discussion of the Naval Estimates in the House of Commons in 1885, Lord (then Sir Thomas) Brassey, Secretary to the Admiralty, stated: "I particularly desire to place on record the services rendered by the Naval Engineer, Mr. Benbow." Promoted to be Inspector of Machinery, "for gallantry in action during the late operations in Egypt" [Gazette, 13 June, 1886]; Chief Inspector of Machinery, 1888. He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 30 May, 1891]: "Henry Benbow, Chief Inspector of Machinery, Royal Navy." Insignia presented by the Queen, 17 Aug. 1891. Sir Henry Benbow married, 1892, Elizabeth Jean, only daughter of the late Henry Bird, of Uxbridge, and their only child is a daughter, Muriel Caroline. He was created a K.C.B. (Military), 26 June, 1902. Sir Henry Benbow, K.C.B., D.S.O., died 20 Oct. 1916.

Henry Benbow.

BEGBIE, ELPHINSTONE WATERS, Colonel, was born at Cheltenham, 15 June, 1842, fifth son of the late Major-General P. J. Begbie, Madras Artillery. He was educated at Crewkerne Grammar School; by private tuition, and at Bonn and Cannstatt, Germany, and was gazetted an Ensign in the Madras Infantry in 1859, becoming Lieutenant in 1861; Captain in 1871; Major, 1879; Lieutenant-Colonel, 1885; Colonel, 1889, and Major-General, 1898. He served with the Abyssian Expedition, 1867–68; served as Sub-Assistant Commissioner-General (Despatches [London Gazette, 30 June, 1868]; Medal). He accompanied the Duffla Expedition, 1874–75; served as Superintendent of Army Signalling (mentioned in Despatches). Joined the Burmese Expedition, 1885–86; served as Superintendent of Army Signalling (Despatches [London Gazette, 22 June, 1886]; Medal with clasp). He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 30 May, 1891]: "Elphinstone Waters Begbie, Colonel, Indian Staff Corps. Assistant Adjutant General." He was admitted to a Good Service Pension in 1897; attached to the Queen's Own Madras Sappers and Miners, 1871–88; Instructor in Army Signalling for Madras Presidency, 1872–88; Commandant, Bangalore Rifle Volunteers, 1880–90; A.A.G., Headquarters, Madras Army, 1891–94; Officiating A.G., Madras Army, 1894–95; D.A.G., Madras Command, with rank of Brigadier-General, 1895. He was transferred to the Unemployed Supernumerary List in 1902. He was created a C.B. in 1896. Major-General Begbie died 11 Feb. 1915.

RHODES, FRANCIS WILLIAM, Colonel, was born in 1851, son of the Rev. F. W. Rhodes; was educated at Eton, and became Lieutenant, 1st Dragoons, 23 April, 1873, becoming Captain, 15 Oct. 1884, and Major, 19 Sept. 1885. He served with the Egyptian Expedition, 1884, and also in the Soudan Expedition under Sir Gerald Graham in 1884, as A.D.C. to Major-General Sir Herbert Stewart, Commanding the Cavalry Brigade. Was present at the Battles of Teb and Tamai (Despatches; Medal with clasp; Bronze Star). He was promoted to Captain in 1885. Capt. Rhodes was also present at the battles of Abu Klea and Gubat; afterwards A.D.C. to Major-General Hon. J. C. Horner (horse shot; Despatches); Action of Gemaizah, near Suakin, in Dec. 1888 (Despatches; two clasps; Brevet of Lieut.-Colonel, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 30 May, 1891]: "Francis William Rhodes, Major and Colonel, 1st Dragoons, Military Secretary to the Governor of Bombay." The Insignia, etc., were sent out to the Commander-in-Chief in India, and presented 31 Aug. 1891; Third Class Medjidie). Colonel Rhodes was Military Secretary to the Governor of Bombay, 1890–93; served with the British South African Company; administered the Government of Marhmaland and Matabeleland, 1894. He retired in 1896, and died 21 Sept. 1905. An obituary notice of him appeared in the "Times" of 22 Sept. 1905.

HAMILTON, IAN STANDISH MONTEITH, General, was born at Corfu, 16 Jan. 1853, son of Capt. Christian Monteith Hamilton, who later commanded the Gordon Highlanders, and was himself the son of John George Hamilton and of Christina Cameron Monteith, daughter of Henry Monteith, of Carstairs, some time Member of Parliament for Lanarkshire. Ian Hamilton's mother was the Honourable Maria Corinna Vereker, daughter of John, third Viscount Gort, by Maria O'Grady, daughter of Viscount Guillamore. The family is one of the elder branches of the Scottish Hamiltons, and Sir Ian represents the male line of the Hamiltons of Westport.

Ian Standish M. Hamilton.

He was educated first at Cheam, and later at Wellington College; studied in Germany, and then went to Sandhurst; was gazetted to the 12th Foot as Second Lieutenant 24 April, 1872, and was transferred to his father's old regiment, the 92nd, 24 April, 1873, becoming Lieutenant 24 Sept. 1873. In the Afghan War of 1878–80, Ian Hamilton was first brought to the notice of Sir Frederick Roberts, on account of his having made his way with one brother subaltern into a signalling post which had been rushed by the Afghans. The two subalterns recovered the arms and accoutrements left therein, and held the post until a relief party arrived upon the scene. They then organized a pursuit and killed the leader of the Afghan raiders, whose body they brought back into camp. As a result of this adventure, Ian Hamilton was made Aide-de-Camp to the Commander of the British Cavalry Brigade, and was present at the engagement of Charasieh, 6 Oct. 1870, including the subsequent pursuit of the Afghans (mentioned in Despatches). He also took part in the operations round Kabul in Dec. 1879 (mentioned in Despatches; Medal with two clasps).

Lieut. Hamilton served in the Boer War in 1881, and was severely wounded at the action of Majuba Hill, where he was subaltern in charge of a weak picket of Gordon Highlanders. He was wounded in the wrist, knee and hand, and taken prisoner; but the Boer commander (probably Joubert) let him keep his sword, which had been his father's before him. Hamilton thanked the Boer General, and remarked: "This has been a bad day for us." "What can you expect," retorted the Boer, "from fighting on a Sunday?" A Dutch hospital assistant inspected the prisoners, and thought Hamilton was too badly wounded to take. He was dismissed with the remark: "You will probably die. You may go." All night he lay in a marsh at the foot of the mountain, and next morning he was found lying there by his own little dog, which had come out with a search party from camp. He was mentioned in Despatches; became Captain, Gordon Highlanders, 25 Feb. 1882.

In 1884 and 1885 he saw service in the Nile Expedition, for he was on his way home from India on leave, and when the steamer reached Suez he ran across the sands to a train just leaving for Cairo, caught it by the skin of his teeth, and again, by a margin of only a few hours, caught the headquarters of his own regiment as it was leaving Cairo for the front. At Wady Halfa, with great difficulty, he got himself definitely posted to a vacancy in the Gordon Highlanders, and was given a company and a boat in the River Column. Toiling up the river, Hamilton's company gradually pulled away from the rest of the regiment, until at last they came up with the fighting front in the middle of the only action fought by the River Column.

He and his company alone of the Gordon Highlanders fought in the action of Kirbeekan and wear the clasp for that engagement. For his services in this campaign he was mentioned in Despatches; given the Brevet of Major 7 Nov. 1885; received the Medal with two clasps and the Khedive's Star.

On his return to India he became an Aide-de-Camp on the Staff of Lord Roberts, then commanding the Madras Army. Lord Roberts was doing his best to improve the shooting of the Army, and he and his Staff formed themselves into teams, and had rifle matches with the regiments in the Madras Command. "In these competitions Hamilton's skill with the rifle and his keen interest in musketry stood him in good stead." He was A.D.C. and afterwards Persian Interpreter to Lord Roberts, Commander-in-Chief in India, from 9 March, 1886, to 30 June, 1890, and in 1886 and 1887 he took part in the Burma Campaign (Despatches; Brevet of Lieut.-Colonel, 1 July, 1887; Medal with clasp).

About this time he wrote a book inculcating the supreme importance of musketry in the Army, and insisting on the necessity for a more practical course than bull's-eye shooting. Moving targets and celerity and precision practices were therein advocated for the first time as a part of a regular military curriculum. The book was called "The Fighting of the Future." During the same period was published, "A Jaunt in a Junk"; a volume of verses, "The Ballad of Hadji and the Boar," and one or two other things. Andrew Lang dedicated a book of poems to him in the following lines:

"TO COLONEL IAN HAMILTON.

"To you who know the face of war,
You that from England wander far,
You that have seen the Ghazis fly
From English lads not sworn to die,
You that have lain where, deadly chill,
The mist creeps o'er the Shameful Hill,
You that have conquered, mile by mile,
The currents of unfriendly Nile,
And cheered the march and eased the strain
When politics made valour vain,
Ian, to you, from banks of Ken,
We send you lays of Englishmen."

After the Burma Expedition, Lord Roberts, who, it is said, was greatly taken with Ian Hamilton's book on musketry, "The Fighting of the Future," made him Assistant Adjutant-General for Musketry at Army Headquarters in India. As A.A.G. for Musketry Ian Hamilton was strongly backed by Lord Roberts in his assiduous work for the improvement of musketry in the Indian Army. The Army at home was still tied to the pure bull's-eye system, but Lord Roberts encouraged his A.A.G. to break away from the old tradition with the shooting course of the native army, which until then had followed closely on the lines of the British Musketry Regulations. So encouraged, Ian Hamilton wrote out the native musketry regulations afresh on original principles, the British Army Regulations being similarly remodelled some years later

He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 30 May, 1891]. He was Military Secretary to General Sir George White, Commander-in-Chief in India, 8 April, 1893, to 10 Oct. 1895, and then became Deputy Quartermaster-General for India; but from this appointment he was sent to take part in the operations of the Chitral Relief Force, with which he served under Sir Robert Low in 1895 as A.A.G. and Q.M.G., Lines of Communication (Despatches; created a C.B.; Medal and clasp). In 1896 he was given command of a brigade in the Tirah Expedition. After marching through the Kohat Pass, his horse fell with him and broke his leg, so that he was obliged to resign his command. When his leg had mended after a fashion, Sir William Lockhart again gave Hamilton command of a brigade (the 3rd Brigade), but the fighting was practically over, though for his services in holding the advanced posts in the Bara Valley General Lockhart mentioned him in Despatches, and he received the Medal with clasp. Whilst holding the outlet of the Bara Valley with his brigade, he received a letter from General Sir William Lockhart offering him the officiating appointment of Quartermaster-General in India, and a cable from Sir Evelyn Wood, Adjutant-General to the Home Forces, offering him the Commandantship of the School of Musketry, Hythe, "in consideration of good services rendered in that branch of military instruction." The Indian post was the more important and much the more highly paid; but Ian Hamilton was a musketry fanatic, and he accepted the Home appointment, thus from 11 May, 1898, to 15 Sept. 1899, being Commandant, School of Musketry, Hythe. When Sir George White was sent to Natal in Sept. 1899, he selected Ian Hamilton as his Assistant Adjutant-General (16 Sept. 1899, to 11 Oct. 1899). He became Major-General (supernumerary) commanding an infantry brigade 12 Oct. 1899, and thus had command of a brigade practically from the beginning of the fighting in the South African War. He took part in the operations in Natal in 1899, including the action of Elandslaagte, where he commanded the infantry, and was recommended by Sir John French—who was himself eye-witness to the personal action of Ian Hamilton—for the Victoria Cross. It was, however, held that a Brigadier-General was too senior to be eligible for that distinction, as it was undesirable that officers of that rank should be encouraged to run too many personal risks. The following letter was given to Sir Ian Hamilton by Lord Roberts. It is interesting both with reference to General Hamilton and to the other officers and men mentioned in it:

"[Copy, C.-in-C., 290.]

"War Office, London, S.W.,
"7 July, 1900.

"SIR,—I am directed by the Secretary of State for War to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th April last, recommending that the Victoria Cross should be conferred upon four officers, four non-commissioned officers and one trooper, named in the margin" (i.e., Ian Hamilton and eight others), "for conspicuous bravery displayed by them on 21 Oct. (at Elandslaagte), 30 Oct. and 4 Nov. 1899, respectively.

"In reply, I am to acquaint you that the Commander-in-Chief will submit to the Queen that the decoration in question be granted to Capt. Meiklejohn, Second Lieut. Norwood and Sergt.-Major Robertson, and that the medal for distinguished conduct in the field be awarded to Sergt. Drummer Lawrence, Corpl. Piper McLeod, L.-Corpl. Dryden and Trooper Evans, whose conduct, though gallant, was not, in his opinion, of such a nature as to merit the high distinction of the Victoria Cross. With regard to Colonel (local Major-General) Ian Hamilton, I am to observe that the act for which he was recommended was performed when he was commanding a brigade—i.e., in the position of a General Officer. The Victoria Cross has never been conferred upon an officer so high in rank. The Commander-in-Chief thinks this limitation a wise one, and that it would not be desirable to establish a precedent opposed to it. He is unable, therefore, to submit Major-General Hamilton's name to the Queen.

"I am to add that while Colonel Wools-Sampson evidently led his men with much gallantry, Lord Wolseley does not feel that his conduct was sufficiently exceptional to call for the bestowal of the great favour of the Victoria Cross.

"I have the honour to be, Sir,
"Your obedient Servant,
(Sd.) "COLERIDGE GROVE,
"M.S."

Ian Hamilton fought in command of his brigade at Rietfontein and Lombard's Kop, and in the defence of Ladysmith, including the action of the 6th Jan. 1900, when he commanded on Waggon Hill and Cæsar's Camp. He took part in the operations in the Orange Free State from Feb to May, 1900, including the actions at Houtnek, Vet River and the Zand River, during which time he was nominally Lieut.-General commanding a Mounted Infantry Division, but actually in command of two brigades of infantry under Generals Smith-Dorrien and Bruce Hamilton, as well as a large force of cavalry, artillery and mounted infantry. With this force he fought successfully at Welkom Farm, Winburg, Zand River, Lindley, Heilbron, Florida, near Johannesburg and at Pretoria. At Diamond Hill he commanded the right attack which eventually broke through the enemy's line. Shortly afterwards he broke his collar-bone by a fall from his horse, but after a brief delay he was fitted out with another column, and took part in the operations in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, July to 29 Nov. 1900, including the action at Zilikat's Nek. He was Military Secretary at the War Office 11 Dec. 1900, to 9 Nov. 1901, when he returned to South Africa as Chief of the Staff to Lord Kitchener, until 8 April, 1902, when he took command and directed operations in the Western Transvaal. During this period he fought the last serious battle of the war at Roodewal, completely defeating De la Rey's lieutenant, Kemp, who had collected large Boer forces in the Western Transvaal to oppose him, and recapturing Lord Methuen's guns, captured by De la Rey at Tweebosch. The news of this defeat reached the Boer delegates at Pretoria, where the question of peace was being discussed, and was a factor in inducing them to come to terms (vide "Times History of the War in South Africa," Vol. V., pages 525–527).

In his "Great Boer War" (pages 299–300) Sir A. Conan Doyle gives his impressions of Ian Hamilton at this time: "A thin, aquiline man, of soft voice and gentle manners, he had already proved more than once during his adventurous career that he not only possessed in a high degree the courage of the soldier, but also the equanimity and decision of the born leader. A languid elegance in his bearing covered a shrewd brain and a soul of fire. A distorted and half-paralysed hand reminded the observer that Hamilton, as a young lieutenant, had known at Majuba what it was to face the Boer rifles. Now, in his forty-seventh year, he had returned, matured and formidable, to reverse the results of that first deplorable campaign. This was the man to whom Lord Roberts entrusted the command of that powerful flanking column which eventually formed the right wing of his main advance." (Three times mentioned in Despatches, and promoted Major-General and subsequently Lieut.-General for distinguished services in the field; created a K.C.B.; Queen's Medal with six clasps, King's Medal with two clasps). He was reappointed Military Secretary at the War Office, holding this appointment from 12 Sept. 1902, to 26 April, 1903; was Quartermaster-General to the Forces, Headquarters of Army, 17 April, 1903, to 1 Feb. 1904; was appointed Colonel, Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders, 1904; served as Military Representative of India with the Japanese Army in the Field, in Manchuria, 22 March, 1904, to 22 April, 1905, being present at most of the principal battles and engagements during the campaign, including the repulse of Count Keller's attack in the Pass of Montienling, at Yanseling, at Liao-Yang, the Shaho and Heikotai, and received the Japanese War Medal and the Order of the Sacred Treasure. He was also created a G.C.B. He was G.O.C. in Chief, Southern Command, 1 June, 1905, to 31 May, 1909; Adjutant-General to the Forces, 1 June, 1909, to 31 July, 1910; General Officer Commanding in Chief, Mediterranean, and Inspector-General, Overseas Force, 1 Aug. 1910, to 1 Aug. 1914; General Commanding-in-Chief, Central Striking Force, Horse Guards, London, 10 Aug. 1914, to 13 March, 1915. He commanded the Mediterranean Expeditionary Force in 1915, of which the "Observer" of 26 Dec. 1915, says: "It was from beginning to end a fighting adventure surpassing the Homeric Legend of Troy over the Straits. It marks an epoch in human estimate of the courage and fibre of modern men among the English-speaking peoples. It will live for ever in the history of our race, and thrill posterity as long as Britain and her sea-bred breed endure." An Australian General, and one of the island continent's most distinguished sons, gave it as his opinion to the present writer that no other general could have done better than Sir Ian Hamilton under the circumstances. Like the Charge of the Light Brigade, the Dardanelles Campaign may or may not have been war, but it was magnificent. There the sons of the island continent went to their deaths as to a picnic, and made for their country a history and for themselves a fame that shall live for ever. And their lives are no more wasted than was the water from the well of Bethlehem which King David poured out before the Lord because it was too precious to drink. And not the Australians only—seasoned soldiers, Territorials, barristers and farmers, clerks and country gentlemen from the Cotswold country and from the Ever Faithful City, Gurkhas and Connaught Rangers—there they lived or died as Fate would have it. There on the heights of Chunak Bair they beheld, like Moses, the promised land which they should not themselves possess. Crusaders of a later day, they weakened the power of the infidel and his devilish allies, and prepared the way for others more fortunate but not more glorious than themselves. They died, but their names shall live for ever. But to return to Sir Ian Hamilton personally. Bled white for Salonika, and only half-heartedly supported by the politicians at home and by some of its military leaders, the expedition seemed doomed to failure from the first. Not the enthusiasm of Ian Hamilton himself, or the whole-hearted support of his friends, could make of the Mediterranean Expedition anything but the glorious failure, which appeals to some of us more than ninety-and-nine successful campaigns. Major the Marquess of Ailesbury, D.S.O., writes: "You ask me what I can tell you of Sir Ian Hamilton. But why ask such a question? You place me in a difficulty. It has been my privilege to have had his acquaintance, to have served several months under his command, to have seen him in action. He is the beau-ideal of an English gentleman: educated, polite, good-hearted, charming. In short, he is a Sahib. But I am not myself a soldier, and though I have had the good fortune to wear uniform in two wars, I am none the less an amateur, and was only called in with many thousand others when the 'Regulars' found they had bitten off more than they could chew. Therefore, on military subjects my opinion must be worthless. I can only say that I believe Sir Ian is never so happy, so entirely self-contained, as when under fire. I believe he experiences a real pleasure in the face of danger. With regard to the work he did for the improvement of the soldier's ability in shooting—this is historical, and it is enough to say that Sir Ian practised, before 1882, what Lord Roberts advocated twenty years later. As to the tragedy of Gallipoli, British commanders seldom have the opportunity to dictate the strategy of a campaign, and Hamilton cannot be blamed for the policy which planted an insufficient force at the far end of what is really a vast defile. Believing, as I always have, that no occupation of Constantinople is possible until the defending field army is crushed, accepting the axiom that 'numbers alone can annihilate,' it appears certain to me that the Cabinet erred grievously both in their choice of ground and in the resources they employed. Possibly history will decide that any movement against the Turk, with the exception of the occupation of Basra, was entirely unsound. We should have struck at the heart—the heart was in Berlin; our nearest base to the heart was on the Marne." Mr. Henry Nevinson, in his great book on the Dardanelles (pages 64–67), says of Sir Ian Hamilton: "The appointment to command the military forces had come to him unexpectedly but five days earlier, and on 13 March he started from London. He had received only slight and vague instructions from Lord Kitchener, but on certain limitations the Secretary for War insisted, and all of them strongly influenced Sir Ian's subsequent action. If possible, a landing was to be avoided; none was to be attempted until the Fleet had made every effort to penetrate the Straits and had failed; if a landing became unavoidable, none should be made until the full force available had assembled, and no adventurous operations were to be undertaken on the Asiatic side. All these instructions were followed. But they revealed the hesitating reluctance with which the Dardanelles campaign was regarded, not only by Lord Kitchener himself, but by his subordinate generals at home and in France. The 'Westerners' were naturally in the ascendant. The danger to the Allied cause lay close at hand. It had only recently been averted from the Channel and from Paris. The British Staff, equally with the French, represented that not a man could be spared from France, and that the only assured road to victory lay straight through the German lines. The opposition to any 'side-show,' especially if it diverted a Regular division such as the 29th, was expressed with the emphasis of jealous alarm. Even the appointment of Sir Ian Hamilton to the distant enterprise was likely to be received with mingled sentiments. He counted forty-two years of service in the Army. Since the days of the Afghan War and Majuba Hill (where his left hand was shattered), he had risen step by step to all but the highest commands. The Nile, Burma, Chitral and Tirah had known him. He commanded the infantry in the rapid but vital engagement at Elandslaagte, and during the siege of Ladysmith had charge of the extensive and dangerous sector known as Cæsar's Camp and Waggon Hill. In the final months of the Boer War he was Lord Kitchener's Chief of Staff, and commanded mobile columns in the Western Transvaal, greatly contributing to the conclusion of the war. Since then he had served at home as Quartermaster-General, as G.O.C.-in-Chief of the Southern Command, and as Adjutant-General. Abroad he had served as Military Representative of India with the Japanese Army in Manchuria (1904–5), when, in 'A Staff Officer's Scrap-Book,' he foretold the disappearance of cavalry and the prevalence of the trench in future warfare; as General Officer Commanding-in-Chief in the Mediterranean, and Inspector-General of the Overseas Forces (1910–15). Except that he had never yet held supreme command in any considerable campaign, his experience in military affairs and in almost every phase of our Army's activity was hardly to be surpassed. On the other hand, he was sixty-two; and though he was a year younger than Lord French, and retained a slim and active figure such as enabled Lord Roberts to take command in South Africa at seventy, sixty-two was regarded as a full age for any officer in so difficult a campaign upon a desert promontory. From a mingled Highland and Irish descent he had inherited the so-called Celtic qualities which are regarded by thorough Englishmen with varying admiration and dislike. His blood gave him so conspicuous a physical courage that after the battles of Cæsar's Camp and Diamond Hill, the present writer, who knew him there, regarded him as an example of the rare type which not merely conceals fear with success, but does not feel it. Undoubtedly he was deeply tinged with the Celtic 'charm'—that glamour of mind and courtesy of behaviour which create suspicion among people endowed with neither. Through his nature ran a strain of the idealistic spirit which some despise as quixotic, and others salute as chivalrous, while, with cautious solicitude, they avoid it in themselves. It was known also that Sir Ian was susceptible to the influence of beauty in other forms than those usually conceded to military men. He was an acknowledged master of English prose, and though our people read more in quantity than any other nation, the literary gift is regarded among us as a sign of incapacity, and is not, as in France and ancient Greece, accepted as assurance of far-reaching powers. What was worse, he was known to have written poetry. Before the war his opposition to the introduction of conscription in the United Kingdom had roused the animosity of all who aimed at establishing militarism as a permanent system in this country. Thus political animosity was added to the official prejudice against a buoyant and liberal temperament conjoined with a politeness and an open-hearted manner startlingly at variance with official usage. One must acknowledge that, in choosing the man for command, Lord Kitchener hardly took sufficient account of qualities likely to arouse antipathy among certain influential classes and the newspapers which represent their opinions. But careless of such prudent considerations, as his manner was, he allowed his decision to be guided by the General's long experience in warfare, and designedly selected an eager temperament liable to incautious impetuosity, but suited, as might be supposed, to an undertaking which demanded impetuous action. It was, however, probably in fear lest natural impulse should be given too loose a rein that the instructions mentioned above impressed only caution upon the appointed commander. In view of the strong opposition to the whole enterprise, it was also assumed that no reinforcements could be promised, and none should be asked for. Even the allotted divisions were not allowed the ten per cent. extra men usually granted to fill up the gaps of immediate loss. After that conference in the Queen Elizabeth on 22 March (when Sir Ian left the final decision to the Naval authorities), it was evident that a military landing could not be avoided unless the whole expedition were abandoned. It is easy now for belated prudence to maintain that Sir Ian should then have abandoned it, secured (if he could) the acquiescence of the Navy in defeat, counter-ordered the assembling troops and returned to London." Mrs. Stuart Menzies says, in "Sir Stanley Maude and Other Memories" (pages 8–10): "There are various stories told of General Maude at this time, one being that when orders were given to evacuate Cape Helles, and it became known that the Gallipoli Campaign was a thing to be wiped off the slate, and, if possible, forgotten, General Maude could not at first believe it, the idea of evacuation being most painful to him, and there were some, who did not know his stern sense of duty and his love of strict soldierly discipline, who feared he might 'queer the whole evacuation at the last moment by starting an attack on the Turks all on his own,' for they knew how firmly he believed—in fact, never doubted for a moment—that with proper reinforcements and munitions they could have taken Constantinople. . . . General Maude said: 'It (speaking of the evacuation) came as a bombshell to us all. In Sept. we were told we were to have the reinforcements that were needed, consisting of four French divisions, under ——, and two divisions of fresh British troops, which, in the opinion of every officer who carried any weight was ample to enable us to push through; but that miserable Loos spoilt everything.'" In this connection it is interesting to recall a remark made by Gunner Lodge, V.C., whose plain soldier's tale of his experiences in South Africa is, General Creagh says, "the best thing in this book." He said: "When I hear people saying that Lord French and Sir Ian Hamilton didn't do things in this war, I say to myself, They didn't do things because they hadn't got the men. No general, however good he is, can do anything without men. Not but what General French, in South Africa, could do a job and mop it up with about three hundred men, where another leader would want twice the number." General Maude wrote to his wife on 26 Dec. 1915: "It was a pity that we could not go on at Suvla and get through, and if they had given us the means to, I am sure we should have been successful. But without the necessary men, guns and munitions and transport, it was of course no use trying, and the next best thing was to get out as we have done. My only regret is that they did not get out of Helles at the same time, and this is indeed, in my opinion, a blunder. Everything seems very stationary everywhere, and I suppose the frost and snow are mainly responsible." Maybe the Dardanelles was a forlorn hope. Maybe Andrew Lang was gifted with second-sight when he wrote to Ian Hamilton of times "when politics made valour vain." Andrew Lang wrote a poem in the same book about Melvill and Coghill—Melvill hampered in mid-stream by the Queen's Colour; Coghill, who could have saved himself, but returned to throw away his life too. And all for a flag. Sir Ian Hamilton was created Lieutenant of the Tower of London. In the final "War Honours" Gazette, dated 3 June, 1919, General Sir Ian Hamilton, G.C.B., D.S.O. (Colonel, Gordon Highlanders, Lieutenant of the Tower), to be Knight Grand Cross of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. In Feb. 1887, Sir Ian Hamilton married Jean, eldest daughter of Sir John Muir, First Baronet, of Deanston Perthshire.

General Maude wrote on 24 Oct. 1915:

"Things are still very unsettled here. General Munro has not arrived yet, and Birdwood is temporarily in command, but both he and Byng are more or less on the sick-list. It is difficult with the scanty news we get to make out the position in the Balkans, but Servia seems to be faced by the Germans and Austrians on the north, and by the Bulgarians on the east, whilst the Turks are said to be rushing troops there too. If that is correctly the situation it seems essential that there should be a big blow somewhere, either in the West or in Russia or here. I only hope things are not going to 'drift' again, but our conduct of this war has been so bad throughout and our strategy so farcical that we cannot help having misgivings. We talk and threaten too much, and say what we are going to do after the war, instead of getting down to business, selecting our point and striking hard at it and effectively, like the Germans do. For instance, this business here should be well within our compass if taken in hand resolutely and with adequate means. But it is no use trying to do it by halves. It is all the more necessary that we should strike early here as, if the Germans are successful against Servia, things will be very much more difficult for us here. I do hope that we shall drop our 'wait and see' attitude, and get on and at least try to do something."

In "In the Side Shows," Capt. Wedgwood Benn, D.S.O., D.F.C., M.P., gives us some sidelights on the Dardanelles Campaign, and on the feelings of the troops. Here is one of them: "The news received . . . of the recall of Sir Ian Hamilton did nothing, needless to say, to raise our spirits. We regretted the loss of a chief who had, on all occasions, loyally and generously appreciated the efforts made by the forces under his command."

Sir George Arthur, after describing Kitchener's relief at the successful evacuation of Gallipoli, says in Volume III. of his "Life of Lord Kitchener" (page 210): "Nor—now that all was over—did he forget that the adventure to the Dardanelles, politically well conceived, would be far from barren of eventual effect. He saw from the first that a blow at Turkey's heart—even if not immediately fatal—must weaken and might paralyse her activities in the East. He did not live to gauge how far Gallipoli cleared the road to Jerusalem, but he could realize the real worth of Ian Hamilton's work, and knew that the heroes of the Dardanelles Expedition, thwarted in their main object, had still, like an iron rod, broken the spine of Turkish military power."

CLEMENTS, RALPH ARTHUR PENRHYN, Brevet Lieut.-Colonel, was born 9 Feb. 1855, youngest son of the Rev. Jacob Clements, Sub-Dean and Canon Residentiary of Lincoln. He was educated at Rossall, and joined the 24th Regt. 2 Dec. 1874; served in the Galeka and Zulu Wars, 1877–79 (Despatches; Medal with clasp); became Captain, South Wales Borderers, 4 Dec. 1880, and Major 24 Feb. 1886. He served with the Burma Expedition, 1885–89, as Brigade-Major (thrice wounded; mentioned in Despatches; Medal with two clasps; Brevet of Lieut.-Colonel; created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 30 May, 1891]: "Ralph Arthur Penrhyn Clements, Major and Brevet Lieut.-Colonel, South Wales Borderers." Insignia, etc., sent to Commander-in-Chief in India; presentation 4 Nov. 1891). He became Lieut.-Colonel 1 July, 1887, and Colonel 4 Dec. 1896; served in South Africa, commanding the 12th Brigade, and as Major-General on the Staff (Despatches; Queen's Medal and three clasps; King's Medal and two clasps); was created a C.B. 1904; commanded a First Class District in India, 1904; became Lieut.-General. He died at Quetta 2 April, 1909. The "Times" of 3 April, 1909, says, in an obituary notice of him: "His first active service was as a Lieutenant in the 24th Foot, during the South African War of 1877–79. In the Kaffir Campaign he was present at the Battle of Newmarks, and in the Zulu Campaign at the Battle of Ulundi. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 26 Feb. 1878], and received the Medal with clasp. Promoted to Captain in the South Wales Borderers in Dec. 1889, and to Major in Feb. 1886, he served on the Staff during this period as Brigade Major in the Burmese Expedition, and as A.P.M. He was twice wounded in action, and was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 22 June, 1886]; received the Medal with clasps, and the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel in July, 1887. During the war in South Africa he served as Major-General on the Staff, and also in command of the districts of Pretoria and Standerton-Heidelburg. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 29 July, 1902]; received the Queen's Medal with three clasps, and the King's Medal with two clasps. Lieut.-General Clements was A.D.C. to Queen Victoria from 1896, and to King Edward VII. from 1901. He received the D.S.O. in 1891, and a C.B. in 1904. From Feb. 1900, he served in India, where from 1907 he commanded the 4th Division at Quetta. He died 2 April, 1909, after an operation for appendicitis." All through the "Official History of the War in South Africa" we get accounts of the services of this distinguished officer. On page 404 of Vol. I. we read that "while the affair at Slingersfontein was in progress a welcome reinforcement arrived. Major-General R. A. P. Clements brought with him the 1st Royal Irish and the remainder of the 2nd Worcestershire men of his brigade (12th), in all an addition of 18 officers and 874 men. Clements was immediately placed in command of the Slingersfontein area."

On 29 Jan. 1900, Colonel J. Watkins Yardley tells us in "With the Inniskilling Dragoons in South Africa" (page 20), "General French left for Cape Town to meet Lord Roberts and arrange for the famous Relief of Kimberley. He handed over the command of the forces before Colesberg to Major-General Clements. These now consisted of the 18th Royal Irish, Worcesters, Berks, Wilts and Essex Regiments, J Battery R.H.A., four 15-pounders, 4th R.F.A., two howitzers, Victorian Mounted Rifles, South and West Australian Mounted Infantry, etc., but early in February they were much weakened by the departure of all the Regular Cavalry, except B and C Squadrons, Inniskilling Dragoons, for Orange River, en route to Kimberley. A Squadron, Inniskilling Dragoons, was attached to the Scots Greys, and left with them for Modder River. The Boers at this time were in great strength at Colesberg, nearly 10,000 strong, with many guns, and were most aggressive. They were daily being increased, whereas our forces were being lessened for the Kimberley relief. So General Clements was left in a most trying position, but he proved himself equal to the task." Colonel Yardley goes on to describe the fighting throughout February, which culminated in the capture of Colesberg on 28 Feb. On 7 March the Inniskillings in advance seized Norval's Pont. On 20 March "General Clements started to march to Bloemfontein, via Philippolis, Jagersfontein and Fauresmith. . . . The columns marched to Bloemfontein without opposition, the inhabitants coming in and surrendering their arms. The march occupied sixteen days, the forces arriving at Bloemfontein on 5 April."

Later on in his book (pages 222–3) Colonel Yardley tells us how, on 13 Dec., news was received of General Clements's disaster in the Magaliesburg, so headquarters, with the remainder of the Inniskillings, under Major Allenby, marched the same day in great haste with the 1st Cavalry Brigade to his assistance. Having reached Vlakfontein Farm, near Houtkop, a lamp message was received to move on at 3 a.m. and join Colonel Gordon at Jaroosfontein. This having been done, the brigade moved on by Van Wyk's Rust to the Roodepoort mines, and by another night march to Krugersdorp. Being Dingaan's Day, it was expected that the Boers would attack Krugersdorp. The 14th Hussars joined by rail from Heidelberg, and the brigade marched at 3 a.m., with the 14th Hussars, Scots Guards and Dublins in support, to co-operate with General Clements to the north-west. "We heard his guns firing heavily all the morning. Near Zeekoehoek we came on the flank of some 2,000 to 3,000 Boers, under De la Rey, falling back west before Clements. Unfortunately we were too late, and they got away with some casualties. Bivouacking at Vaalbank, we started again at 4 a.m., but only succeeded in slightly engaging the Boer rearguard, which was retiring south-west. Colonel Gordon was now appointed to command the whole force, Colonel Hamilton, 14th Hussars, taking command of the Brigade next day. General Clements, supported by Alderson's Mounted Infantry, attacked Naauwpoort Hill, to the west of us."

On 9 Jan. 1901, Colonel Yardley tells us that "the Inniskillings, 14th Hussars, two guns and a pom-pom, all under Major Allenby, reconnoitred towards Breedt's Nek, and got into communication with General Clements."

Apropos of Lord Allenby it is said that many publishers approached him with the object of getting him to write a book on the Palestine Campaign. He was made an offer by at least one publisher which ran into thousands of pounds, but did not agree to write the book. At last an American came, who said, "Whatever any of the others have offered, I'll pay you double. And, what's more, I'll write the book myself." Even this sporting offer did not tempt Lord Allenby.

SETTLE, HENRY HAMILTON, Major and Brevet Lieut.-Colonel, son of Capt. H. T. Settle, of Southover, Lewes; born 27 Jan. 1847; was educated at Heidelberg and Cheltenham; entered the R.E. 10 July, 1867; became Captain 1879; passed Staff College 1883; Major 1886; Lieutenant-Colonel 1893; Colonel 1893; Major-General 1902; Lieutenant-General 1908; retired 1911. Served in Nile Expedition, 1884–5, as D.A.A.G. and D.A.Q.M.G. (Despatches, Medal with clasp, Bronze Star, Brevet Major); in Anglo-Egyptian Expeditions as Chief Staff Officer at action of Gemaizah, Suakin, 1888 (Despatches, clasp, Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel), and at action of Toski, 1889 (Despatches, clasp, 2nd Class Medjidie); Chief Staff Officer in expedition to retake Tokar Delta at action of Afafit, 1891 (Despatches, clasp); created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 30 May, 1891]: "Henry Hamilton Settle, Major and Brevet Lieut.-Colonel, R.E., attached Egyptian Army." Served in the South African War, 1899–1902, as Brigadier-General on the Staff, Inspector-General, Lines of Communication, also commanded Columns (Despatches twice, two Medals with clasps; K.C.B. (Military); promoted Major-General for distinguished service in the field); Surveyor-General and Q.M.G. Egyptian Army, 1886–92; Inspector-General, Egyptian Police, 1892–4; Assistant Inspector-General of Fortifications, War Office, 1895–9; Commanding R.E. Malta, 1899; G.O.C. Cape Colony District, S. of Orange River, 1901–2, and Cape Colony, 1903; G.O.C. Portsmouth Defences, 1905–8; has rank of Pasha, 2nd Class Osmanieh and Grand Cordon Medjidie; created D.S.O. 1891; C.B. (Military) 1898; K.C.B. (Military) 1900. He married, in 1875, Edith, only daughter of the late Jonathan Rigg, of Wrotham Hill Park, Kent.

Henry Hamilton Settle.

In the "Official History of the Boer War" (Vol. I., page 182), we read how "Lord Kitchener, leaving Naauwpoort, had spent a day at De Aar, and there arranged with Brigadier-General H. H. Settle, commanding the section of the line of communications to the south of the Orange River, for the despatch westward of three small flying columns . . . to deal with the hostile bands assembling n the direction of Prieska and Van Wyk's Vlei."

On page 212 Sir F. Maurice says that except for these three columns under Settle, Adye and Parsons, and the immobile troops guarding the railway, the whole of Cape Colony, west of a line drawn from Cape Town to Kimberley, was for a time without military protection.

In Vol. III., pages 11–16 is given an account of the suppression of the rebellion in the North-West of Cape Colony, in which he took part. When the western area of the Transvaal (see Vol. III., page 228) was divided into military districts, in order to carry out the pacification, the command of the south-west area, with Headquarters at Vryburg, was given to Sir H. H. Settle.

He took part in the operations in the Western Transvaal. He fought through the operations in the Orange River Colony, and on page 496 of Vol. III. we are told how Settle, who had been skirmishing and foraging for some time in the south-west of the Colony, . . . arrived at Edenburg laden with booty of every description."

On page 513: "Since the middle of October, Major-General Settle, with a force of 600 mounted men, ten guns and 1,350 infantry, had been operating between Christiana and Bothaville."

When De Wet invaded Cape Colony, sixteen bodies of troops were within the border and organized for the field (Vol. IV., page 65). All these were placed under the general command of Major-General Sir H. H. Settle, and in the ensuing pages we read about the movements of these troops.

For a time Lieut.-General Sir N. G. Lyttelton took command, and Sir H. H. Settle resumed command after his departure. The record of services given above shows how for the South African War Sir H. Settle received two Medals with clasps; was twice mentioned in Despatches; received a K.C.B., and was promoted Major-General for distinguished service in the field.

WINTLE, FRANK GRAHAM, Lieut.-Colonel, was born at Jullundur, India, 2 Dec. 1852, 3rd son of the late Major-General Alfred Wintle, Royal (Bengal) Horse Artillery. He was educated at a private school, and at Merchant Taylors' School, and joined the Control Department in 1872. He was posted, on its breaking up, to the Ordnance Store (now Army Ordnance) Department, becoming D.A. Commissary-General of Ordnance 31 Jan. 1880. He served in the Sudan Expedition, 1884–85; on the Nile (Despatches [London Gazette, 25 Aug. 1885]; Medal with clasp; Bronze Star; promoted Assistant Commissary-General of Ordnance 15 June, 1885). He again served in the Sudan, 1884–85, on the Nile; was present at the action of Ginniss and was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 6 Feb. 1886]. He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 30 May, 1891]: "Frank Graham Wintle, Honorary Lieut.-Colonel, Assistant Commissary-General of Ordnance, Ordnance Store Department." The Insignia were presented to him by the Queen, 17 Aug. 1891. He became Deputy Commissary-General of Ordnance 24 April, 1895, and Colonel and Ordnance Officer, 1st Class, 1 April, 1896. Colonel Wintle retired. He died, unmarried, 24 Feb. 1907.

LEACH, HAROLD PEMBERTON, Major and Brevet Lieut.-Colonel, late R.E., 4th son of the late Lieut.-Colonel Sir George Archibald Leach, K.C.B., R.E.; born 1851; first commission 1871; promoted Colonel by Brevet in 1894; retired in 1908 and became Honorary Brigadier-General in 1912. Served with 1st Division Khyber Field Force in command of Company, Bengal Sappers and Miners, 1878–79; was present at capture of Ali Musjid, action at Deh Savak and the operation in the Bazar Valley (Despatches). Subsequently in the Kurram Valley, 1879–80, when he took part in Zaimuckt Expedition, including the taking of Zowa (Despatches, thanks of Government of India, Medal with clasp). Lent to Home Government for service with Camel Transport during the Nile Expedition, 1884–85; present at the actions of Abu Klea and Gubat; Senior Transport Officer on withdrawal of Force from Metemneh (Medal with two clasps; Bronze Star; Brevet of Major). He became Surgeon-Major 31 March, 1886, and again saw active service in the Burmese Expedition of 1886–87. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 2 Sept. 1887], and received the Medal and two clasps. He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 30 May, 1891]: "James Sutherland Wilkins, Surgeon-Major, Indian Medical Service." The Insignia were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in India and the presentation took place on 7 Dec. 1891. He was promoted to Brigade Surgeon-Major, ranking as Lieutenant-Colonel, 31 March, 1894, and later became Colonel. He married, in 1905, Dora Sophia Lee (who died in 1906), second daughter of the Rev. F. French, of Worlingworth Rectory, Suffolk, and they had one son. Colonel Wilkins died 27 Oct. 1916.

EGERTON, CHARLES COMYN, Major, was born 10 Nov. 1848, at Parsonstown, King's County, Ireland, son of the late Major-General C. R. Egerton (Colonel, 89th P.V.O. Regt.); educated at Rossall and Sandhurst; entered the Army in 1867 as Ensign, 76th Foot. He married, in 1877, Anna Wellwood (died 1890), daughter of the late J. L. Hill, Esq., W.S., of Edinburgh, and their children were: Wion de Malpas, born in 1879 (is Captain, R.N., and D.S.O.); James Boswell, born in 1880 (killed in action 1918), and Charles Caledon, born in 1886 (killed in action 1915). He served during the Afghan War, 1879; was with General Sir F. Roberts, Bart., V.C., G.C.B., in his march from Kabul to Kandahar; Battle of Kandahar (Despatches, 3 Dec. 1880; Medal with clasp, Bronze Decoration); Mari Expedition, 1880; Black Mountain Expedition, 1888 (Despatches, Medal); 1st and 2nd Miranzai Expeditions; was severely wounded, mentioned in Despatches, and given the Brevet of Colonel, clasp, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 30 May, 1891]: "Charles Comyn Egerton, Major, Indian Staff Corps, Assistant Adjutant-General, Punjab Frontier Force." (Insignia sent to Commander-in-Chief in India, and presented in India.) He served in the Waziristan Field Force, 1894–5, in command of a column (Despatches [London Gazette, 2 July, 1895], created a C.B. 1895, clasp); with the Dongola Expedition, commanded Indian Contingent (Despatches, British and Khedive's Medals, A.D.C. to H.M. Queen Victoria); commanded 1st Brigade, Tochi Force, 1897–8 (Despatches, 11 Feb. 1898, Medal with clasp); commanded Expeditions against Mahsud Waziris, 1900–2, and Darwesh Khel Waziris, 1902–3; commanded Somaliland Field Force, 1903–4; action of Jidballi (Medal, two clasps, created a K.C.B. 1903); and created a G.C.B. 1904; commanding troops in Madras, 1904–7; General 28 Oct. 1906; retired 5 Feb. 1907; is Colonel, Cavalry Frontier Force, India; Member of Council of India, 1907–17; Field-Marshal, March, 1917. Field-Marshal Sir C. C. Egerton has the Afghan Medal and clasp for Kandahar; the Indian Frontier Medal and three clasps; the Indian General Service Medal and two clasps; the Dongola Medal and Khedive's Medal; the Somaliland Medal and two clasps. He was four times mentioned in Despatches; awarded the D.S.O.; holds the Coronation Medal and the Jubilee Medal.

Charles Comyn Egerton.

The London Gazette of 2 Sept. 1904, published a series of Despatches relating to the operations in Somaliland, from 18 Jan. 1902, to 31 May, 1904. These give a full and exhaustive account of the fighting against the Mullah till the cessation of the operations in April, 1904. The reasons for bringing them to a close were set forth in a telegram from Major-General Egerton to the Secretary of State for War, dated 12 Aug. 1904. In part of this telegram General Egerton said: "Reports from both Fasken and Manning, as to the state of both troops and transport, confirm me in my opinion that further operations at this season are impossible. If the rain sets in in the Najal the withdrawal of the troops there will become an impossibility on account of the deep nature of the soil, as will also be the supplying of them in the present advanced position." After giving other reasons for the withdrawal, General Egerton goes on to describe how the power of the Mullah has been broken: "The Mullah has been outmanœuvred, and forced north. His military power was broken by the decisive defeat at Jidballi. Subsequent operations on the Najal have completed his rout, driven him out of the Protectorate and dispersed his followers. Large numbers in an indigent and demoralized condition have fled from the Protectorate to their own country. The Dolbahantas are scattered, and are at present without proper or tribal organization, and are to a large extent disorganized refugees among the Protectorate tribes. These have received a lesson that should teach them to avoid collision with us in future. The Mullah, with practically only his Aligheri following, is a discredited refugee in the Mijjarten territory, at the mercy of Osman Mahmud. His actual capture by the Field Force is under present conditions, in my opinion, impracticable. There is now no enemy in arms against us in the Protectorate. It is under these conditions that I advocate the cessation of operations, the reduction of the Field Force, and the early relief of the units required for the support of the civil administration, to enable it to take advantage of this present favourable state of affairs."

We give extracts from the obituary notices of those two out of Sir Charles Egerton's three gallant sons, who were killed in action in the Great War. The eldest and surviving son received a Letter of Commendation from the Admiralty on 30 June, 1915, and was subsequently awarded the D.S.O.

The "Times" of 23 April, 1915, says: "Lieut. Charles Caledon Egerton, Duke of Wellington's Regt., who fell on 18 April, aged 28 years, was the third and youngest son of General Sir Charles Egerton, G.C.B., D.S.O. He entered the Army in Aug. 1905; was promoted Lieutenant in 1908, and from Jan. 1911, to 1913, served as Adjutant of his regiment."

The "Times" of 15 Nov. 1918, says: "Major J. B. Egerton, Indian Cavalry, who was killed in action on 27 Oct., was the second son of Field-Marshal Sir Charles Egerton, and was born on 4 Nov. 1880. He was educated at Rossall and at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and received his first commission on 17 Jan. 1900, on the unattached list of the Indian Army. On arrival in India he was attached to the Somerset Light Infantry, and in 1901 he was posted to a regiment of Punjab Cavalry in the Indian Frontier Force. He served on the North-West Frontier of India in the Waziristan operations in 1901 and 1902, and in the operations against the Darwesh Khel Waziris of 1902 (Medal and clasp), and in East Africa in 1903–4, in operations in Somaliland, including the action of Jidballi; he was mentioned in Despatches and received the Medal and two clasps. He served in France during the autumn and winter of 1914–15, with a regiment of Hussars. In the summer of that year his own regiment, being ordered on service, he rejoined, and had served continuously with them up to the date of his death. He was mentioned in Despatches and received the Croix de Guerre. His younger brother, Lieut. C. C. Egerton, Duke of Wellington's Regt., was one of the original Expeditionary Force, and was killed in action at Hill 60 in April, 1915.

MANSEL, ALFRED, Capt., was born 5 Feb. 1852, son of the late Capt. W. H. Mansel; entered R.A. 12 Sept. 1872; served in Naga Expeditionary Force, 1879–80, in command of R.A.; was present at the storming of Khonona (Despatches, Medal with clasp); Mahsud-Wuzeree Expedition, 1881, with Tank Column, and with Burma Expedition, 1886–7, in command of R.A., and was present at the advance on Nyaungwe (Despatches, two clasps); created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 30 May 1891]: "Alfred Mansel, Capt., Royal Artillery." Insignia presented in India; became Lieutenant-Colonel, 15 July, 1898; Brevet Colonel 15 July, 1902; late commanding Northern Section, R.A., Plymouth; retired, with the rank of Colonel, 15 July, 1903. He died 7 July, 1918.

YEILDING, WILLIAM RICHARD, Capt., was born 13 Jan. 1856, at Carrig Kerry, Co. Limerick, son of the late Hugh Eldon and Margaret Yeilding, of Woodlands, Tarbert, Co. Kerry. He was educated at Rathmines School, Dublin; Ennis College, Co. Clare, and Mr. Mulcaster's, Woodwich, and joined the 54th Regt. 29 Nov. 1876, and was transferred to the B.S.C. (now Indian Army), 1879; served in the Afghan War, 1879–80, with the 1st Sikhs, and the 5th Gurkhas, at Jellalabad and Kabul; took part in the March from Kabul to Kandahar, and at the Battle of Kandahar (Medal with clasp and Bronze Star); with Mari Expedition, 1880; with Mahsud-Waziri Expedition 1881, and Hazara Campaign, 1888 (Black Mountain). He was mentioned in Despatches; G.G.O. 978 of 1888, states: "Capt. W. R. Yeilding, A.C.G., Divisional Transport Officer, who, under the orders of the Chief Commissariat Officer, ably superintended the transport arrangements of the Force. His powers of organization have been shown in the manner in which the large amount of Government and hired transport has been worked with complete success. I consider him a most excellent officer." Capt. Yeilding, who was several times in action during the Hazara Campaign, also received the Medal with clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 30 May, 1891]: "William Richard Yeilding, Capt., Indian Staff Corps." He served in the Tirah Campaign and Bazar Valley Expedition, 1897–98 (India Medal with two clasps); Tirah, 1897–98, and Punjab Frontier, 1897–98 (mentioned in Despatches); with the Somaliland Field Force, 1903–4, on the Staff. In Tirah he was present at the storming of the Sampagha and Arhanga Passes and in the fighting round Bagh, and on the return march of the 1st Division to India via the Mastura Valley. The London Gazette of 3 Sept. 1904, publishes Lieut.-General Sir C. Egerton's Despatches for Somaliland, 1903–4 (extract): "One most satisfactory feature of the campaign has been the smooth and efficient working of the Staff and of all departments. The Supply and Transport Department has, doubtless, been the most severely taxed, but owing to the admirable organization of the transport, and the foresight and resource of the Director, it has proved equal to all emergencies. . . . Lieut.-Colonel W. R. Yeilding, C.I.E., D.S.O., is an officer of great force of character whom no difficulty dismays, or sudden change of plans can disconcert. His powers of organization are immense, and it is due to him that this Field Force has been able to maintain itself in the field so long." He received the African Medal with clasp, Somaliland, 1903–4, and was given the Brevet of Colonel. He was employed on special duty in Kashmir, 1892–97 (thanked by the Government of India, and by the Home Government, and created a C.I.E. 1895); held various administrative appointments in the Supply and Transport Corps; became a substantive Colonel in 1905; was created a C.B., 1908, and retired 1910. Is in receipt of a wound pension for an injury received on active service during the Somaliland Campaign, 1903–4. He married, 9 Dec. 1881, at Calcutta, Theresa, daughter of Richard Magrath Fitzgerald, of Limerick, and they had one daughter, Eileen Geraldine, who died in 1913.

William R. Yeilding.

BEECH, JOHN ROBERT, Capt., was born 2 July, 1860, 2nd son of the late James Dixon Beech, Esq., of Ballintemple, Co. Cork, and Susan, daughter of John Malone, of Co. Wexford. He was educated at Newton School, Waterford. When the Egyptian War broke out he was about 18 years old, and studying at the Edinburgh Veterinary College. He was expecting to become a land agent, and was making a study of animals and their diseases. He passed out top of all the students, gaining the Medal. Being eager to get to the front, he joined the Army as a Veterinary Surgeon, the only means of entrance available to him. He did much valuable work, buying horses and camels for the Government, and served through the Egyptian War and the Gordon Relief Expedition, and the Sudan, receiving the only seven-clasp Medal of that campaign, the clasps being: Toski, 1889; Gemaizah, 1888; Abu Klea, The Nile, 1884–85; El Teb, Tamaai, Suakin, 1884; Tel-el-Kebir. After the Gordon Relief Expedition he went with Sir Gerald Portal on a mission from Queen Victoria to King John of Abyssinia, and carried the Queen's letter alone to King John through a most difficult and hostile country, and was given the C.M.G. His D.S.O. he got after the Battle of Toski, instead of the V.C., for which he was recommended by two Generals. His Companionship of the Distinguished Service Order was gazetted 30 May, 1891: "John Robert Beech, Capt. (C.M.G.), 20th Hussars (attached to Egyptian Army)." The Insignia, Warrant, etc., were sent to the Governor of Egypt, and presented by him 7 Dec. 1891. For his services after the Gordon Relief Expedition, King Edward (then Prince of Wales) recommended him for a combatant commission, and he was gazetted as Lieutenant to the 21st Lancers, and almost immediately got seven years' promotion in one day, and was appointed to the 20th Hussars as Captain (1901). He served in the Egyptian Cavalry for many years, and on two occasions, when only 25 years of age, commanded them in most successful engagements against the Dervishes. At 28 he married, left the Egyptian Cavalry, and rejoined the 20th Hussars. The then Inspector-General of Cavalry, Sir Keith Fraser, singled him out for special mention when on manœuvres, saying before the whole Cavalry Division that it was a picture to see Capt. Beech at his work. Shortly after this (1894), he sent in his papers and entered the Reserve of Officers, but rejoined for the Boer War, serving on General French's Staff, and got the Queen's Medal with five clasps. In the Great War he was in command of a Regiment of Scottish Horse. In addition to the Egyptian and South African Medals, he had the Osmanieh, Medjidie and the Khedive's Star and clasp. On 1 Dec. 1894, he married Alexandria Marion, daughter of the late Kenneth Mackenzie, Esq., of Stornaway, and widow of John Bullough, of Meggerie Castle, Glen Lynn, Perthshire. Their sons are: Clyde, born 13 April, 1896 (Capt. Rifle Brigade, killed 18 Oct. 1916, aged 20); George, born 3 Feb. 1900; Alexander Frederic Charles, born 13 April, 1902, died 25 Oct. 1905; Graham, born 25 Dec. 1905, and Gerald, born 25 July, 1908. Lieut.-Colonel J. R. Beech, C.M.G., D.S.O., died a short time ago at Louth, Lincolnshire, from a chill caught in camp, whilst commanding the 2/1st Scottish Horse.

John Robert Beech.

KEARY, HENRY D'URBAN, Capt., was born 28 April, 1857, at Holkham, Norfolk, son of the late Hall William Keary, of Bridgenorth, Shropshire, and Helen D'Urban Keary, daughter of the late Lionel Rodwell, of Staithe House, Brancaster, Norfolk. He was educated at Marlborough, and joined the Army as Sub-Lieutenant (unattached), 10 Sept. 1875; became Second Lieutenant, 12th Foot, 29 Aug. 1876; Lieutenant, Army, 10 Sept. 1877; was appointed to the Madras Staff Corps 7 May, 1877, and proceeded to India. He served with the 1st Madras Infantry, 1876–77, and with it took part in the Afghan War, 1879–80 (Afghan Medal); served with the Madras Pioneers, 1883–85; through the Burma Campaign, and subsequent annexation, to the end of the operations, 1885–7 and 1887–89 (Despatches, Frontier Medal with four clasps); raised and commanded a Military Police Battalion, 1887–92 (clasp); became Captain, Indian Staff Corps, 10 Sept. 1888; commanded a Company of Mounted Infantry during the rebellion of the Wuntho State, 1891–92–93; received a clasp, and was mentioned in Despatches for the action near Kawbei. Sir G. Wolseley writes: "I desire to bring prominently to notice the brilliant services of Capt. H. d'U. Keary. I consider that the advancement of this Officer would be of benefit to the Service. The spirit of dash and confidence inspired by his presence at Kawbei and the prompt manner in which he grappled with the situation and turned the hitherto needlessly cautious state of defence into one of vigorous and determined attack, is worthy of special acknowledgment." Sir James Downes writes: "Capt. Keary of the Military Police seems to be an officer of great intrepidity and decision for at a critical moment he assumed—with a position of his Mounted Infantry—the rôle of Cavalry, and dispersed the enemy, who were attacking Kawbei on three sides." (G.G.O. No. 985, dated 16 Oct. 1891.) Capt. Keary was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 18 March, 1892]: "In recognition of services during the operations in the Wuntho District, Upper Burma. Henry D'Urban Keary, Capt., Indian Staff Corps." Insignia, Warrant, etc., sent to the Commander-in-Chief in India 7 July, 1892, and presented by him 26 Oct. 1892. Sir Henry Keary commanded the 91st Punjabs from 1892 to 1909, and is Colonel of the Regiment. He served in the Rebellion of the Northern Chin Hills, 1892–93, and was given the Brevet of Major 29 Dec. 1893, and mentioned in Despatches. He became Major, Indian Army, 10 Sept. 1897. Major Keary served in China, 1900–1902 (China Medal, Despatches, [London Gazette, 14 May, 1901]). He became Lieutenant-Colonel 10 Sept. 1903. He was given the Brevet of Colonel 10 Sept. 1906; was A.D.C. to H.M. the King 2 Sept. 1907, to 30 Nov. 1911; became Colonel 20 Jan. 1910, and commanded the 2nd Infantry Brigade, Secunderabad, 1909–10; was Brigade Commander (Colonel on Staff, India), 20 Jan. 1910, to 13 Nov. 1911; was promoted Major-General 1 Dec. 1911; was Brigade Commander, India, 14 Nov. 1911, to 12 Oct. 1914; Brigade Commander, Garhwal Brigade, B.E.F., 13 Oct. 1914, to 7 Jan. 1915; promoted Lieutenant-General 1 Aug. 1917; was Divisional Commander, Lahore Division, B.E.F.; Mesopotamian Expeditionary Force, 8 Jan. 1915, to 1917; Divisional Commander, India, 16 Oct. 1917, to 12 Aug. 1918; Divisional Commander, India, 13 Aug. 1918. He was created a K.C.I.E. in 1917, and is Colonel, 91st Punjabis.

The Garhwal Brigade consisted of the 2nd Battn. Leicestershire Regt., the 2nd Battn. 3rd Queen Alexandra's Own Gurkha Rifles, the 1st Battn. 39th Garhwal Rifles, and the 2nd Battn. 39th Garhwal Rifles.

After the Battle of Givenchy the Corps Commander showed his appreciation of the work done by the following message to the Division: "I congratulate you on the good work done last night, which shows what can be done by enterprise and care. Please send my hearty congratulations to Major-General Keary, the Leicesters, and the 2/3rd Gurkhas, for their gallant behaviour."

On the 7th May, 1915, a letter was received from General Smith-Dorrien, from which we give an extract: "Having read the very complete and excellent report on the work of the Lahore Division in the heavy fighting near Ypres, on the 26th and 27th April, 1915, the Commander of the 2nd Army is confirmed in the views he formed at the time, that the Division had been handled with great skill and determination by Major-General Keary."

From the 28th April till its departure on the 3rd May, the Division was under the orders of Lieut.-General Sir Herbert Plumer, commanding Plumer's Force.

On the 2nd May, Sir Herbert Plumer wrote as under to General Keary: "Will you please convey to the Brigadiers, Commanding Officers, and all Officers, Non-commissioned Officers and men of your Division, my thanks for the assistance they have rendered in the recent severe fighting, and my appreciation of the way in which they have carried out the very arduous duties entrusted to them while under my command. I deeply regret the very heavy casualties they have suffered."

General Sir James Willcocks sent the following message to General Keary: "Please convey to all ranks of Division my own and all their other comrades' best congratulations on having taken part in the battle near Ypres. We are proud of you all. Well done."

We are told in "The Indian Corps in France" (page 288) that during the Second Battle of Ypres, "When General Keary moved up to his advanced headquarters near St. Jean, he found the road strewn with corpses and dead animals. He himself had a narrow escape, for a shell, bursting in close proximity to his car, blew his kit off the roof, but luckily did no more serious damage."

On the 31st July, 1906, at St. James's Church, Piccadilly, London, W., he married Mabel Louisa Lloyd, daughter of the late Colonel Malcolm Lloyd, Deputy Commissioner, Burma.

Henry D'Urban Keary.

London Gazette, 9 Aug. 1892.—" The Queen has been graciously pleased to give orders for the following appointments to the Distinguished Service Order, in recognition of the services of the undermentioned Officers during the recent operations on the West Coast of Africa resulting in the capture of Tambi and Toniataba."

NORRIS, RICHARD JOSEPH, Capt., was born 27 Feb. 1854, youngest son of the late Edward Norris, who was a grandson of Jeremiah Norris, Colney Hall, Norwich, descended from a branch of the Norris family of Speke, Lancashire. He was educated at Mount St. Mary's, Derbyshire; Beaumont College, Old Windsor, and at Sandhurst, and joined the 1st West India Regt. 19 Feb. 1879, as Second Lieutenant, becoming Lieutenant 1 Dec. 1880, and Captain 29 Jan. 1888. He served in the operations in the Tambaku country, West Africa, 1892, being present at the capture of Tambi; was mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 9 Aug. 1892]: " Richard Joseph Norris, Capt., West India Regt. For services in West Africa." He became Major 1 April, 1894, and commanded the Karene Expedition (first phase), 1898, and Lieutenant-Colonel 27 March, 1902, and retired 5 July, 1905. During the European War Lieut.-Colonel Norris served as Draft Conducting Officer, 1915–1916. He married, in 1894, Beatrice Marion, daughter of His Excellency the late Arthur van de Velde, Belgian Minister Resident, and Mme. Van de Velde, of 109, Lancaster Gate, W., and they have one daughter, Marion Beatrice Catharine.

Richard Joseph Norris.

MERRIMAN, REGINALD GORDON, Lieut. was born 10 Nov. 1866, at Aden, son of General Charles James Merriman, C.S.I., Royal Engineers (late Bombay Engineers), and Eugenia Sybilla, daughter of Colonel Richard Bulkeley, Indian Army. He was educated at the United Services College, Westward Ho! North Devon, and at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich (Tombs Memorial Scholar, 1884). He joined the Royal Artillery 9 Dec. 1884, and served in the Expedition to the Tambaku Country, West Africa, 1892, and was decorated for his services in this Expedition, particularly in the capture of Tambi. He received the West African Medal with clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 9 Aug. 1892]: " In recognition of his services during the recent operations on the West Coast of Africa, resulting in the capture of Tambi and Toniataba. Reginald Gordon Merriman, Lieut., Royal Artillery." The Insignia were presented by the Queen at Osborne 10 Jan. 1893. He was promoted Captain 31 Dec. 1893, and Major 9 Dec. 1903. On 13 Nov. 1894, at Ickham, near Canterbury, Kent, he married Mary Gertrude Rose, 2nd daughter of the late S. Gregson Fell, Esq., J.P., of Ickham Hall, Ickham, Kent. Capt. Merriman was Adjutant of the Kent Artillery, E.D.R.A., 1895–99; Recruiting Staff Officer, London (temporary), 1899–1900; D.A.A.G. for Auxiliary Forces, H.Q., 1900–02; D.A.A.G. Woolwich District, 1902–3; became Lieutenant-Colonel 29 Jan. 1913. Lieut.-Colonel Merriman served in France from Aug. 1916, to Jan. 1917, with the Siege Artillery.

London Gazette, 30 Sept. 1892.—" War Office, 30 Sept. 1892. The Queen has been graciously pleased to give orders for the following appointment to the Distinguished Service Order, and promotion in the Army, in recognition of the services of the undermentioned Officer during the recent expedition against the Jebus. To be a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order."

MADDEN, GEORGE COLQUHOUN, Major, was born 9 Feb. 1856, at Brighton, son of Henry Riderwood Madden, M.P., and Helen Madden (née Cowan). He won the Dux Medal while a boy at school in Edinburgh. Entered the Army in 1875; was promoted Captain in 1877; served against the Jebus and Sofas, West Coast of Africa, 1892. " During the attack on the town of Toniataba, Major G. C. Madden, West India Regt., who was in command of the troops, was superintending a party of twelve men who were endeavouring with a heavy beam to break down the south gate of the town, when suddenly a number of musket muzzles were projected through a double row of loopholes which had been masked. Some of these were within two or three yards of that officer's back, and before he realized what had happened, L.-Corpl. Gordon threw himself between Major Madden and the muskets, pushing that officer out of the way, and exclaiming, 'Look out, sir!' At the same moment L.-Corpl. Gordon was shot through the lungs. By his bravery and self-devotion on this occasion, the L.-Corpl. probably saved the life of his commanding officer." The above is the description (taken from the London Gazette of 9 Dec. 1892) of how L.-Corpl. W. J. Gordon (the first coloured man to be given the Victoria Cross) won his decoration. In the same year Major Madden accompanied the Expedition against the Jebus, Lagos, when he was mentioned in Despatches, received the Medal and clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette 30 Sept. 1892]: " For his services during the recent operations against the Jebus. George Colquhoun Madden, Major, West India Regt." Presentation by the Governor of Sierra Leone 2 Jan. 1903. George F. MacMunn.

In " The Life of Sir Stanley Maude " (page 238), Sir C. E. Callwell says: " The important post of Inspector-General of Communications was in the hands of Major-General G. F. MacMunn, with whom Maude had had frequent dealings while in the Gallipoli Peninsula and while in Egypt, as he had then held a high position on the line of communications in the Eastern campaign." Again on page 251: " The Army Commander felt sure that, with General MacMunn as Inspector-General of Communications, and with ample reserves of everything actually in the country, the flow of personnel and material from the base up to the front, as required, was assured." On page 268, in the chapter on the Campaign of Baghdad, General Callwell says: " The Army Commander was intent upon giving the enemy no rest, but . . . he had been compelled to stay the forward movement for fear of entirely outrunning his supplies. The Staff had found some difficulty in persuading him of the need for this pause, but the arrival of General MacMunn with a flotilla of vessels crammed with food and stores as soon as navigation was safe, and his representations as to the imperative need of getting these forward before a fresh rush to the front was undertaken, decided the matter. The Inspector-General of Communications went aboard the steamer on which Maude, with Army Headquarters, was on the point of moving upstream. The Staff feared that further advance was for the moment premature, and they urged General MacMunn to make representations. 'I was literally pushed into his curtained-off space,' is General MacMunn's account of what followed. 'He said, "How are supplies?" I said, "Coming on well, but it is two miles of river for every one mile by land, and I can't feed you and supply ammunition if you move another yard yet." He looked at me quizzically, and asked, "When may they start?" So I said, "Not before the 5th," when all he remarked was 'Right." By that time we had the show in hand. You see, I had received no warning of his proposed push for Baghdad.'" On page 302 Sir Charles Callwell says: "Sir George MacMunn, who had played so important a part in rendering possible the brilliant campaign carried out by the Army Commander, and who assumed command on the return home of Sir W. Marshall, sends the following account, dated the 17th July, 1919, of the relations that existed between them, and of what Maude accomplished during his period of service in Mesopotamia: 'I write this note on our late chief from his quarters in Baghdad (where died also Von der Goltz), and from the room in which he died, in which I work in some hope that his hand may rest on my shoulder. I first met Maude at the War Office in those strenuous years of preparation before the war. We next met in Gallipoli, where I had official dealings with him as Commander of the 13th Division. But we first came really together when, one of the last to leave Suvla Bay, he landed on peaceful Imbros, to find his tired men drawing hot Maconochie rations as they stepped off their lighters. That gift of the old officer, care and thought for his men, lay very deep within him. In Egypt I helped to equip his division for Mesopotamia, following him thither shortly afterwards as Inspector-General of Communications. In May, 1916, just after the fall of Kut, I found him at Sheikh Saad on the Tigris, once again re-forming that division that had been so often battle-swept, and we talked far into the night of how to maintain the army in health and efficiency in an undeveloped land of great extremes. It was not, however, until Sept. 1916, when he had succeeded to the command of the army, and I was constantly thrown with him, that I came to appreciate and to understand the determination, the vision, and the knowledge of principle and detail that animated him. Few knew how anxious were his days from the advance beyond Kut to the last days in 1917. The army hung by a thread, and the enemy attempts to expel us were considerable; but maintenance was his chief anxiety in my interviews with him during and after the advance, and at times he would wire to me twice or thrice a day. It was this strain on mind and body, continued through a long and abnormally hot summer, that left him little strength when the trial came. Efficiency and thoroughness had been his watchword, and he died at the height of his achievement.'"

Sir G. F. MacMunn has published "The Armies of India," in 1911; "Pike and Carronade," in 1912; "A Free Lance in Kashmir: A Tale of the Great Anarchy," in 1914. He married, in 1893, Alice Emily, eldest daughter of Colonel J. R. Watson, I.S.C., and they have one son and one daughter.

GORE-BROWNE, GODFREY, Lieut. Royal Navy, was born in Hobart, Tasmania, 30 March, 1862, son of Sir Thomas Gore-Browne, K.C.M.G., C.B. (some time Governor of St. Helena, New Zealand, Tasmania and Bermuda), and of Harriett, daughter of James Campbell, of Craigie House, Ayr, N.B. He was educated at Mr. Allen's School, and H.M.S. Britannia, and joined the Royal Navy. He was Midshipman of the Euryalus during the Egyptian War of 1882 (Egyptian Medal and Khedive's Bronze Star). He was mentioned by Rear-Admiral Sir W. N. W. Henett, K.C.B. in his Despatch [London Gazette, 8 Sept. 1882]: "I beg to bring to favourable notice services of Mr. Gore-Browne, Midshipman, my A.D.C., who was most useful to me" (page 4172 of Gazette). He became First Lieutenant of Philomel, on the West Coast of Africa in 1894, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 21 Dec. 1894]: "Godfrey Gore-Browne, Lieut., Royal Navy. In recognition of his services against the Chief Nana of Brohemie on the Benin River." Lieut. Gore-Browne was mentioned in Rear-Admiral Bedford's Report [London Gazette, 21 Dec. 1894]: "I desire especially to mention the executive officers of Philomel and Phœbe, Lieuts. Gore-Browne and Hickley. It would be difficult to find two more able and zealous officers." Awarded General African Medal, Benin River, and 1894 clasp. On one occasion Lieut. Gore-Browne was watching from a ship's boat other naval officers bathing. Sharks were sighted and the bathers hastened to climb the boat. As one was drawing himself into the boat a shark was seen rising and turning over to seize his legs. Lieut. Gore-Browne jumped from the thwart of the boat (with his boots on) on to the shark, which made off hastily, and Lieut. Gore-Browne returned to the boat none the worse. Commander Gore-Browne died at Mentone 5 April, 1900.

London Gazette, 4 Jan. 1895.—"The Queen has been graciously pleased to give orders for the following appointment to the Distinguished Service Order, in recognition of the services of the undermentioned Officer in the expedition against the Zebus in 1892, and during the recent operations in Central Africa."

OWEN, EDWARD RODERIC, Major, was born on 4 May, 1856, at The Hewletts, Prestbury, Gloucestershire, where his father then resided, son of Hugh Darby Owen, Esq., of Bettws Hall, Montgomeryshire, North Wales, and of Mrs. Hugh Owen. "Roddy" Owen was educated at a private school at Malvern, and at Eton (1869–73), and for a year with a tutor, during which time he began his riding career by winning the Duke of Beaufort's Blue Coat Race at Dauntsey on the late Mr. E. Chaplin's Holland. He entered the Army through the Militia, receiving on the 3rd March, 1875, a commission in the 2nd Battn. South Devon Infantry Militia (11th Foot). On the 11th Sept. 1876, he was transferred to the 1st Battn. of the 20th (East Devonshire) Regt., which, in 1881, became known as the Lancashire Fusiliers. He joined his new regiment at Halifax, Nova Scotia. He shot in the Rocky Mountains; came home on leave in 1878; kept a few horses (which were trained by his elder brother Hugh at Cirencester), and rode some races. In 1879 his regiment was stationed at Malta, and in 1881 Roddy hunted to his heart's content, and won many important races. In 1883 he was stationed at Mhow in India, and in March, 1884, was attached to the Staff of the Viceroy, Lord Ripon, as Extra A.D.C. He became well known on all the race-courses in Bengal. In Aug. 1884, at the age of 28, he was promoted to Captain, and returned to Ireland, where he migrated from the staff of Lord Ripon to that of Lord Spencer, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. He won the great Sandown Steeplechase in 1884, and in two successive years he rode the winning mount in the Sandown Grand Prize. Twice he won the great Sandown Steeple-chase on the same horse, Kilworth. In 1899 he had the highest average of wins among gentlemen riders for the year. In 1889 and 1900 he was A.D.C. to General Sir Evelyn Wood at Aldershot. In 1891 he was selected for the Mounted Infantry Regt. at Aldershot, which had been raised and was then commanded by Colonel Hutton. In 1892 he steered Father O'Flynn to victory in the Grand National, and directly after the race he took the train to London, applied at the War Office for active service, and served as Chief of the Staff to General Sir Francis Scott, Inspector-General of the Gold Coast Constabulary; commanded the expedition against Zebus in West Africa, and left England for Lagos. In 1892 he served with Sir Gerald Portal's Mission in Uganda. He was chosen as Commandant of the Equatorial Provinces of Torn and Unyoro, 1893–94, during which time he quelled single-handed a Moslem revolt of a critical nature. He was then entrusted with the important mission of planting the British flag under circumstances of extreme difficulty at Wadelai, thus safeguarding the upper reaches of the Nile for Great Britain. He received the African Medal, 1892, the Brilliant Star of Zanzibar, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 4 Jan. 1895]: "In recognition of services against the Zebus in 1892, and during the recent operations in Central Africa, Edward Roderic Owen, Captain and Brevet Major, The Lancashire Fusiliers." The Insignia were presented 3 Sept. 1895. In the summer of 1894 he was home on leave, and in Jan. 1905, sailed for India to join his regiment at Quetta. He became Official Correspondent of the "Westminster Gazette" during the North-West Frontier Campaign, and being attached to the King's Own Scottish Borderers, took part in their well-known charge. He and Colonel Sir Younghusband were the first to enter the Fort of Chitral, after a forty-mile ride in a hostile country, in advance of the Relief Force. Major Owen travelled in the Pamirs; joined the Sudan Expedition, receiving the Medal and the Firket Medal. In the endeavour to stamp out cholera at Ambigol Wells, where he was Commandant, he contracted illness and died there. The Arabs, who loved him, placed circles of white stones round his grave. A Memoir of him has been written by his sister, Lady Owen-Mackenzie.

Edward Roderic Owen.

The following is a report on the regiment made by Lord Roberts: "Inspected the 3rd Sikhs at Kohat last November, and was very pleased to find it in the admirable condition for which it has been noted for some years past. It is composed of a fine, serviceable body of men, who are well-drilled, smart and well set-up. A grand spirit pervades all ranks, and the regiment is fit for any services. The Assistant Adjutant-General for Musketry reports that 'this is the best battalion I have seen on the Frontier. There is a finish and smartness about the drill that is seldom seen. The men are satisfactory as shots and brilliant as regards fire discipline. The native officers and non-commissioned officers are very good all round—especially as Section Commanders. The present efficient state of the 3rd Sikhs is no doubt due to its having an exceptionally good set of British officers, and to the general wise and careful supervision exercised by the Commandant, Lieut.-Colonel Thompson, to whom the greatest credit is due.' Capt. Codrington is particularly noticed for zeal and energy. (Sgd.) Roberts, General, C.-in-C., India. Dated 19 July, 1892, Adjutant-General's Office, Simla." "Capt. Fasken desires to congratulate, on behalf of Colonel Thompson and himself, the British and native officers and non-commissioned officers and men on the report on the regiment by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, which has just been received, and he is sure he is expressing the opinion of Colonel Thompson that the splendid report is entirely due to the excellent spirit which pervades all ranks, and the constant endeavour of all to maintain its reputation for smartness and general efficiency. The regiment is therefore, as the Commander-in-Chief remarks, 'fit for any service.'" Lieut.-Colonel W. O. Thompson served in the Waziristan Expedition of 1894–95, in command of the 3rd Sikh Infantry, and was given the Brevet of Colonel, received clasp, mentioned in Despatches twice, G.S.O. 268 and 473 of 1895, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Aug. 1895]: "In recognition of services during the recent operations in Waziristan, William Oliver Thompson, Lieut.-Colonel, Indian Staff Corps." In recognition of services during the recent operations in Chitral." The Warrant, Statutes and Insignia were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in India, and presented 9 April, 1896. He was D.A.A.G., Intelligence, Head Quarters of Army, 9 Oct. 1899, to 14 Feb. 1900; D.A.A.G., South Africa, 15 Feb. 1900, to 28 Oct. 1900; Staff Captain (Intelligence), Head Quarters Army, 29 Oct. 1900, to 30 Sept. 1901. In the South African War, in 1899 and 1900, he took part in the operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900, including operations at Paardeberg (17 to 26 Feb.); actions at Poplar Grove, Dreifontein, Vet River (5 and 6 May) and Zand River. Operations in the Transvaal in May and June, 1900, including actions near Johannesburg and Pretoria. Operations in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, July to Oct. 1900 (Despatches, [London Gazette, 16 April, 1901]; Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 29 Nov. 1900; Queen's Medal with four clasps). He was promoted to Major, 10 March, 1900, and was A.Q.M.G. (Intelligence) Headquarters of Army 1 Oct. 1901, to 31 Jan. 1907; promoted to Colonel 29 Nov. 1903; created a C.B. in 1905; A.Q.M.G., Aldershot Army Corps, 14 May, 1907, to 28 Nov. 1907; Brigadier-General, General Staff, Aldershot Command, 29 Nov. 1907, to 31 July, 1910; Commandant, Staff College, 1 Aug. 1910, to 25 Dec. 1910, and 26 Dec. 1910, to 8 Oct. 1913; promoted to Major-General 26 Dec. 1910; Director of Military Training, War Office, 9 Oct. 1913, to 4 Aug. 1914; created a K.C.V.O. in 1913. He served in the European War from 1914. As Quartermaster-General, B.E.F., 5 Aug. 1914, to 24 Jan. 1915; Chief of General Staff, B.E.F., 25 Jan. 1915, to 22 Dec. 1915; promoted Lieutenant-General 28 Oct. 1915; Chief of Imperial General Staff, War Office, 23 Dec. 1915, to 18 Feb. 1918; created a K.C.B. in 1915; promoted to General 3 June, 1916; appointed A.D.C. to the King 15 Jan. 1917; created a G.C.B. in 1917; General Officer Commanding-in-Chief (temporary), Eastern Command, 19 Feb. to 29 May, 1918; General Officer Commanding-in-Chief, Great Britain, 30 May, 1918, to 21 April, 1919; General Officer Commanding-in-Chief, British Army of the Rhine, 22 April, 1919. Sir William Robertson was created a Baronet in 1919, and a G.C.M.G. in 1919. He married, in 1894, Mildred Adelaide, second daughter of the late Lieut.-General T. C. Palin, Bombay Staff Corps, and they have two sons and two daughters.

William R. Robertson.

We have given the bare outlines of the career of that distinguished soldier who has been called "our most silent general," and is known as "Wullie" to the Army.

Of Sir W. Robertson as Quartermaster-General, B.E.F., a writer in the "Sketch" of 2 Dec. 1914, says: "His is the case of a man prepared. His line of business ever since he looked after the railway transport during the Miranzai and Black Mountain Expeditions twenty-three years ago has had to do with the care of soldier men. Born some fifty odd years ago, Sir William comes of old Lincolnshire stock. From Welbourne, the place of his nativity, he went to a private school, where he is said to have been the matron's right-hand boy, and to have taken supreme command of the tuck-shop. His first regiment was the 3rd Dragoon Guards, which he entered in 1888; after doing useful transport work in the Black Mountains he was promoted to Staff Captain and D.A.Q.M.G. of the Intelligence Branch at Simla. For four years he worked hard at the provisioning and quartering of men in India. It will be seen that he has worked at the same subjects in several parts of the world. In the meantime, in 1895, he acted as Intelligence Officer to the Headquarters Staff of the Chitral Relief Force. Mentioned in Despatches and severely wounded, he got his D.S.O. at the end of the campaign, and was pounced upon by the War Office for its particular service. With his wife, whom he had met in India, and who was the daughter of another distinguished soldier (the late Lieut.-General T. C. Palin), he settled down for a short time to town life, but to a town life that was never for a moment oblivious to the interests of the camp and the field. With the outbreak of hostilities in South Africa he was very soon called upon to take up his duties as an active overseer of the discipline of the British forces on active service. There is no need to dwell on the connection between the work of a D.A.A.G. and the work of a Quartermaster-General. Discipline and supply, behaviour and the cook-pot, are inseparable. General Buller won the devotion and confidence of his men largely on account of his extreme thoughtfulness for their necessities and comforts, and . . . the efficiency and good discipline of our troops is increased by the excellence of the British commissariat. Pluck, dry powder and Providence are the three P's on which one noted leader sets his faith; provender making a good fourth. After South Africa, Sir William was booked for seven years by a War Office very desirous of reform. Afterwards he went to Aldershot as Assistant Quartermaster-General. Aldershot, of all places, was the right school for one who had to prepare for European complications."

How well Sir W. Robertson did his work when war broke out is seen in Sir John French's Despatch in Sept. 1914: "The Quartermaster-General, Sir William Robertson, has met what appeared to be almost insuperable difficulties with his characteristic energy, skill and despatch."

We get a glimpse in Sir Aylmer Haldane's book, "A Brigade of the Old Army" (pages 67–68), of the way in which Sir W. Robertson prepared the officers at the Staff College for the Great War. General Haldane says: "Though our training in peace-time had largely consisted of practice in offensive operations, the question of retreats, from that of Xenophon onwards, had always interested me. And from the time that I was appointed to command the troops at Shorncliffe I had realized more strongly than before the possibility that if ever our Army were to take part in a European War, the opening operation which it might be called upon to execute would not improbably take the form of a retreat. In this opinion I had been fortified by reading in the 'Army Journal,' I think in 1912, an address by Sir William Robertson to the students at the Staff College; and a part of what he then stated has, through the events that followed, gained such additional interest that I venture to quote it. 'Our regulations,' he said, 'justly lay stress on the value of the offensive; but think what may be the effect of this teaching upon the troops if it alone is given, when they are ordered to retire instead of go forward—that is, to abandon that method of war by which alone, according to the training they have previously received, decisive victory can be achieved! Think, too, of the disintegration and demoralization which nearly always accompany retrograde movements, even when an army has not been previously defeated! It seems to me that there is practically no chance of successfully carrying out this operation in war unless we thoroughly study and practise it beforehand during peace. If we have this previous practice, the operation will not then come as a surprise to the troops in war; they will understand better what they are expected to do, and they will recognize it as being a form of war which may have to be adopted by any army, and can be adopted, not only without failure, but with a certain measure, ultimately, of success.' As, prior to the events at Mons, nothing was further from the minds of most British officers than the possibility of a retreat, the words quoted above seem to me to be all the more striking."

Sir George Arthur says in his "Life of Lord Kitchener" (Vol. III., page 297): "The multiplication of theatres of war had vastly increased the ever-present need of a highly-trained General Staff, and Kitchener had long determined on the man who should be at the head. The officer of his desire was Sir William Robertson, then Chief of the General Staff in France; a strong, shrewd, honest and exceptionally able soldier, to whose marked powers of administration the War Secretary wanted to give full play in his office. He had waited for Robertson about as many weary months as Jacob waited years for Rachel; he would not deprive Sir John of so important a subordinate, but he knew that this self-denying ordinance would not be perpetual. After the Battle of Loos it was understood that a change in the command in France was more than a likelihood, but Kitchener set his face sternly—and spoke his mind in high quarters—against any word or hint which might tend to impair the prestige or undermine the authority of the Commander-in-Chief. But so soon as a term was set to Sir John's command he seized the opportunity offered by changes at the front, and by the revelation of new talent, to bring new blood into the War Office without crippling the armies in the field. With the Prime Minister's willing consent he paid one of his many visits to General Headquarters early in December, and there discussed the future with Robertson, and asked him to put on paper the suggestions he had to make. In a document which was really a covering ground for both men, Robertson postulated as conditions normally essential to the successful conduct of military operations: 'There must be a supreme directing authority to promulgate policy, to determine the theatres of war and their relative importance, to choose the men to execute its plans; its power must be absolute; it must be an executive, and not merely an advisory body.' The War Council should be capable of performing the functions of the supreme authority, provided it is relieved of responsibility to the Cabinet as a whole as regards the conduct of military operations; advice regarding military operations emanating from members of the Cabinet, or of the War Council in their individual capacity, or from any other individual, should be examined and presented, if necessary with reasoned conclusions, to the War Council by the Chief of the Imperial General Staff before it is accepted by the War Council. The Chief of the Staff elect also said that if all communications with the Commander-in-Chief in the field regarding military operations were issued and received by him, it would greatly expedite the despatch of business, and make for greater secrecy than had prevailed. Finally, he proposed some changes which would fortify the Imperial General Staff. A long conversation between Kitchener and Robertson took place in Paris early in December; some modifications of Robertson's proposals were adopted, and arrangements for future war-work wholly agreeable to both were decided upon."

A newspaper said of Sir W. Robertson: "He has a large mind and wide vision, and he has risen to the high position he now occupies by sheer force of ability. If he has not acquired the reputation which Lord Kitchener has as an organizer, this is not from want of capacity, but because the opportunity has never come in his way. As a student of Imperial Strategy, he can walk round Lord Kitchener or any other living soldier."

An interview with Sir W. Robertson is described in the "New York Times":

"'From the soldier's point of view?' I asked him, 'how goes the war?' If he had said, 'It goes well,' I should have thought I had stumbled by accident on Marshal Hindenburg. If he had protested an overwhelming faith in the future, I should have thought a politician had stolen the khaki of England's Man of Iron.

"He said, 'That's so big a question that I should like it in detail.'

"This he said with a portentousness, but with as whimsical a smile as you could wish, waiting for me to speak. The man is characteristically English. You would never think of setting up his wooden effigy in Trafalgar Square for the tin-tacks of emotional patriots. The dark eyes under their thick eyebrows, which are as black as night, have the flashing good-humour of a schoolboy. There's no scowl on his face. He stands with feet wide apart, firm planted, a middle-sized, thick-set, stubborn and tenacious person, husky of voice, hard as nails, with a bright eye, a chin of iron, and a forehead that has the look of a rock. He has those minor flourishes of manner which are second nature to every cavalryman; but his instincts are so sound, his soldiership is so entirely intellectual, and his wit is so quick and human and good-tempered that he escapes swagger as completely as he escapes a deportment of gravity. He gives you the feeling of a man who could never be knocked off his feet by a sudden blow.

"Here's the English Moltke, the organizer of victory, the director of five or six enormous campaigns scattered all over the world, the man who has taken Kitchener's place, the man who fed the British Army on the historic retreat from Mons, the man in whom Britain places its supreme military confidence—a man who never strikes an attitude, never indulges in rhetoric, never gets into a fuss, never asks to be placed anywhere near the limelight, but who gets things quietly and thoroughly done. Kitchener was too prodigious a hero to be characteristic English. He was a legend in his lifetime, a thing almost unknown in English history; for the English like their heroes to be a hundred years dead. More perfectly does this stubborn and good-natured man, firm as a rock, true as steel, and entirely unaffected, passing himself off as an average man, admirably personate the nation. He is its energy, its doggedness, its good-humour, its quiet confidence and its common sense.

"You say of him at the first glance, 'Here is a robust, good-tempered and agreeable Englishman,' and that would leave it. But presently you look harder at him, and say, 'Here is a man of action, with fire ready to spring out of him, cautious in reflection, audacious in act, and like a bull-dog until he gets his way.' His personality makes itself felt in this way, gradually. He has no theatrical effects. He is the country itself, which seems only a pretty garden full of charming people till you stir it up with a walking-stick and discover it's a beehive. No Englishman likes to be thought a hero. He resents it, counts any such tendency a sign of bad breeding; what he likes is to be average." Later on in this interview is the following: "We spoke of Lord Kitchener's prophecy about the duration of the war.

"'Kitchener,' he said, 'had a most extraordinary instinct in military matters. He never thought things out; he seemed to know them. This faculty of his amounted to genius. People who criticize him for mistakes forget that he was seldom wrong in the big things. Some infallible instinct guided him in matters of life and death. His services to the freedom of the world at the outset of this terrible encounter can never be exaggerated. He was a genius. And this must be said of him too. He knew that he could trust his countrymen—trust in their grit, their loyalty, their good, sound, wholesome British stuff. How could he have faced the crisis of three years ago without that faith in the stuff of British character? Kitchener believed in the British nation, believed in British character. That was his strength.'

"'America's entry into the war would have heartened him, wouldn't it?'

"'Well,' said Sir William, with a twinkle, 'he wouldn't have said that it was an advantage to the other side.'"

Lord Milner said after he became a Minister (1916): "The men we look to in these days are men of the stamp of Sir William Robertson; and the next best thing that men like myself and others in a similar position can do is to put our backs into the work that lies before us and give them all the help we possibly can. We must look to their wisdom, experience and judgment to show us the right way, and we must put our shoulders to the wheel and drive the coach as hard as we can on the road they mark out for us."

A writer in the "Globe" of 2 Oct. 1917, says: "Sir William Robertson's main work—though we must not forget that it has been carried on side by side with other labours . . . has been the organization of victory across the Channel, with the result that in the summer of 1916 Sir Douglas Haig for the first time found himself at the head of an army which was able to take the offensive on a wide front, and which has ever since been asserting its ascendancy over the most formidable military power in the world. . . . It would be impossible to exaggerate the debt which the Army and the Empire owe to this great, because devoted, public servant, Sir William Robertson."

An article in the "Saturday Review" on "The Chiefs of the War Office, by One Who Knows Them," says: "The Chief of the Staff, General Sir William Robertson, is the strongest and most interesting personality in the Empire at the present time. He is head and shoulders above most men, and is one who was bound by great ability and sheer force of character to rise to the top of any profession which he adopted. He has risen to the head of the Army, and there is not a dissentient voice which would suggest another better qualified for such a post. . . . Lord Kitchener reposed perfect confidence in him, as does the whole Army, which is the only good judge of those who are set in authority over it."

Elsewhere Sir W. Robertson is described as "a great organizer and a great strategist." "During Lord Kitchener's tenure of office Sir William Robertson, by Order in Council, was entrusted with the organization of the Army and with its strategical dispositions. As it is essential that the man who is responsible for the work to be done should choose his own instruments, so to Sir William Robertson is confided the task of making appointments."

In an appreciation of Sir Stanley Maude, written for and inserted in the Life of that General, by Sir C. E. Callwell, Sir William Robertson says: "When it became necessary to appoint a new commander to our forces in Mesopotamia, I had not a moment's hesitation in recommending Maude for the place.

"It was very important that no mistake should be made in the selection, for the campaign had hitherto been a series of dismal failures and disappointments, and had entailed great hardships and suffering upon the troops." How well Sir William's choice of Maude, "then practically an unknown man to the War Cabinet," was justified, history relates.

Of Sir William Robertson, Clemenceau said that he was "One of the greatest military minds of the war." General Pershing eulogized him. When France mourned "La mort tragique de Lord Kitchener," she spoke in the same breath of "Le successeur du Maréchal Kitchener: Sir William Robertson." Other French writers describe Robertson as "un linguiste d'un talent exceptionnel, qui a passé brillamment des examens dans les différents dialects indiens." This last writer goes on to say that as C.I.G.S. Sir W. Robertson controlled "les dispositions et les opérations des armées britanniques sur tous les champs de bataille de la Guerre. C'est lui qui a été chargé de l'état-major de l'armée. C'est un homme qui n'est jamais prompt à se faire une opinion, bien que sur le terrain il puisse se décider en deux minutes. Mais une fois qu'il a pris un parti, comme on le dit communément dans l'armée, aucun art humain ne peut l'en faire changer par la parole. Il est de race de ceux qui ne pensent jamais à eux-mêmes, mais à leur devoir et à l'honneur de leur pays, et c'est peut-être la raison pour laquelle il a avancé si vite et si haut."

On 19 April, 1916, the "Evening Standard" said: "Sir William Robertson is the most persistent enemy of self-advertisement we have, and he himself would be surprised probably if he were told how strong is the belief of the nation in his capacity as a war winner. He has no axe to grind; he stands solely for efficiency and the job he has in hand."

After the Government and Sir William Robertson came to the parting of the ways, James Douglas said in "London Opinion" of 2 March, 1918: "The Germans stick to their Hindenburg and their Ludendorff, but the British do not stick to their great soldiers and sailors. If Lord Kitchener had lived he would have been shelved or shunted like Lord Fisher, Sir John Jellicoe and Sir William Robertson. It is very strange that three great men like Fisher, Jellicoe and Robertson have all been shelved or shunted. If there were three men left of equal ability, it would still be a tragedy to lose their services, for in this great struggle we need all the genius for war available. If they had all been drowned, like Kitchener, how we should have felt the loss. . . . Fisher—Jellicoe—Robertson! What a triumvirate! There are more brains in those three skulls than in any other three. But by a triple calamity they are all out of it at the supreme moment of the War!"

LOW, ROBERT BALMAIN, Lieut., was born 7 Oct. 1864, son of General Sir Robert Cunliffe Low, G.C.B., and Constance (who died in 1900), daughter of the late Capt. Taylor, H.E.I.C.S.; became Lieutenant, Royal Irish Regt., 7 Feb. 1885; joined the Indian Staff Corps 12 Oct. 1885; served in the Lushai Expedition, 1889 (clasp); in the Hazara Expedition, 1891 (Medal and clasp). clasps); was A.D.C. to Lieut.-General, India, 29 Oct. 1898, to 28 June, 1905 Commandant, Headquarters Camp, and Provost Marshal, China Expedition, 31 July, 1900, to 30 June, 1902, and was present at the relief of Pekin and at the action of Peitsang and Yangtsun (Despatches [London Gazette, 14 May, 1901]; Medal with clasp; Brevet Majority, 29 Nov. 1900). He became Major, Indian Army, 7 Feb. 1903; was D.A.A.G., India, 17 Sept. 1905, to 16 Sept. 1909; was promoted to Lieut.-Colonel, Hodson's Horse, Indian Army, 7 Feb. 1911. On 18 May, 1915, Lieut.-Colonel R. B. Low was given a special appointment (graded D.A.A.G.). He married, in 1899, Mabel Violet, daughter of Major-General O'Grady Haly, C.B.

BALDWIN, GUY MELFORT, Lieut., was born at Penang 22 March, 1865, second son of the late Colonel A. T. Baldwin and the late Margaret, daughter of the late Colonel J. Johnston, K.T.S. He was educated at the Royal High School, Edinburgh, and Wimbledon College; joined the 1st Battn. Loyal North Lancashire Regt. as Second Lieutenant on 30 Jan. 1886, becoming Lieutenant 10 March, 1886. He was transferred to the Indian Staff Corps on 22 March, 1888, and appointed to the 4th Punjab Infantry; served in this regiment as Wing Officer in the Hazara Expedition, 1888, and was present at the action of Kotkai, receiving the Medal and clasp. In 1890 he was appointed to the Q.O. Corps of Guides (Cavalry); served with the above regiment as Squadron Commander during the operations in Chitral, 1895, and was present with the Relief Force in the action near Khar on the descent into the Swat Valley; was slightly wounded; mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 15 Nov. 1895], and received the Medal with clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 21 Jan. 1896]: "Guy Melfort Baldwin, Lieut., Indian Staff Corps. In recognition of services during the operations of the Chitral Relief Force." The Insignia were presented by Her Majesty 24 Feb. 1896. He became Captain, Indian Army, 30 Jan. 1897, and in 1897 and 1898 served on the North-West Frontier of India, taking part in the defence of Malakand, the Relief of Chakdara (severely wounded). Malakand. Operations in Bajaur and in the Mamund country and Buner. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 5 Nov. 1897]; received two clasps, and was given the Brevet of Major 20 May, 1898. He was D.A.A.G., India, 1 April, 1905, to 31 March, 1908. In 1915 he took part in the operations on the North-West Frontier; was mentioned in Despatches, and given the Brevet of Colonel 3 June, 1915, and became Temporary Brigadier-General 15 Feb. 1916, commanding the Derajat Brigade, N.W.F.P., 10 May, 1917. In 1898 he married Margaret, daughter of the late Christopher Sparrow, of Urmston Lodge, Urmston, and they have two sons. His favourite recreations are polo and shooting.

KERR, FREDERIC WALTER, Lieut., was born 20 May, 1867, third son of the late Admiral Lord Frederic H. Kerr, and Emily, daughter of the late General Sir Peregrine Maitland, G.C.B. He was educated at Charterhouse; was Page of Honour to H.M. the Queen, 1879–83, and became Lieutenant, Gordon Highlanders, 25 Aug. 1886; Adjutant, Gordon Highlanders, 31 Jan. 1892, to 30 Jan. 1896; took part in the operations in Chitral, 1895, serving with the Relief Force, and was present at the storming of the Malakand Pass. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 15 Nov. 1895]; received the Medal with clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 21 Jan. 1896]: "Frederic Walter Kerr, Lieut., Gordon Highlanders. For services during the operations of the Chitral Relief Force." He served at Tirah and in the South African War. He was D.A.Q.M.G., 1st Division, 1st Army Corps, 1904 to 1905; became Major 21 Dec. 1904; D.A.A. and Q.M.G., 1st Division, Aldershot Army Corps, 1905 to 1908; was promoted to Lieut.-Colonel 4 July, 1908; was Deputy Assistant Director of Movements, Headquarters of Army, 6 Oct. 1908; was promoted to Colonel. He was killed in action on 31 Oct. 1914. He married, in 1902, Lady Helen Kerr, daughter of the 9th Marquess of Lothian, and they had two sons.

Colonel Kerr's later services are below given in more detail. He served in 1897–98 on the North-West Frontier of India, with the Tirah Expeditionary Force, and took part in the action of Dargai, receiving two additional clasps to his Medal. After serving for some time with his battalion in the South African War, he was appointed a Brigade-Major in April, 1900, holding that appointment till Dec. 1901. He took part in the advance on Kimberley, including the action at Magersfontein; was present at operations in the Orange Free State, at Paardeberg, and the actions at Poplar Grove and Dreifontein; in Cape Colony, 1899–1900, and at operations in the Orange River Colony in 1900–1. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 16 April, 1901]; was given the Brevet of Major 29 Nov. 1900, and received the Queen's Medal with four clasps. As D.A.D. of Movements, War Office, from Oct. 1908, he did valuable service in connection with the new mobilization scheme, which has stood successfully the test imposed on it by the war. In the spring of 1913 he became G.S.O 1, Scottish Command, and in the Great War he went out as G.S.O.1 on the Line of Communication, his appointment dating from 5 Aug. 1914. On the 21 Sept. he was appointed G.S.O.1 with the 1st Division. He was killed by a bursting shell at the headquarters of the 1st and 2nd Divisions at Château Hooge, near Ypres, on 31 Oct. 1914. For his services in the Great War he was mentioned in Sir J. French's Despatch of 8 Oct. 1914.

London Gazette, 10 April, 1896.—"War Office, 10 April, 1896. He was promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel 1 April, 1904; was created a C.B. in 1905; became Colonel 1 Jan. 1908; was Brigadier-General, Irish Command, 7 Feb. 1908, to 13 March, 1909; was promoted to Major-General 1 Jan. 1909; was G.O.C., 6th Division, Irish Command, 16 July, 1910, to 15 July, 1914. He served in the European War from 1914; was temporary Lieutenant-General from 5 Aug. 1914, to 3 May, 1915, promoted to Lieutenant-General 4 May, 1915; commanded the 3rd Army Corps from 5 Aug. 1914, to 19 Feb. 1918; and the 23rd Army Corps 20 Feb. 1918, to 15 April, 1919; was specially employed, British Military Mission to Japan, 18 May, 1918, to 9 Sept. 1918. He was created a K.C.B., 1915; a K.C.M.G., 1917, and a K.C.V.O., 1918. Sir William Pulteney married, in 1917, Jessie, daughter of the late Sir John Arnott, Bart.

We read of the doings of the 3rd Army Corps in 1914 in Lord Ernest Hamilton's book, "The First Seven Divisions." In the chapter called "Manœuvring Westward" (page 142), he says: "On 12 Oct. the 3rd A.C., under General Pulteney, arrived at St. Omer, and moved forward to Hazebrouck. The moment this Army Corps was in position, Sir Horace made the first move in the contemplated sweep by pushing forward the 3rd Division, which was on the left of the 2nd A.C., with orders to cross the Lawe Canal, which the enemy was reported to be holding in force." On page 157 Lord Ernest says: "In the Armentières district, the 3rd A.C. was making great efforts to play up to its allotted part in the wheel to the south, the 4th Division being north of Armentières, the 6th Division south of it." On page 160: "The 9th Brigade, which had throughout these operations been on the left of the 3rd Division, was now temporarily transferred to the 3rd A.C. . . . With the additional assistance which had been lent him, General Pulteney was everywhere successful in holding his ground." In the chapter on "The Birth of the Ypres Salient," Lord E. Hamilton says: "The British force in Flanders now consisted of two distinct and separate armies, which we may call the North and South Army. The South Army was made up of the 2nd A.C., the 3rd A.C., and the 19th Brigade, and was supported by Conneau's Cavalry, which operated between these two army corps, and by the Lahore Indians in rear. The line of this army extended as far north as Le Gheir, or rather, let us say, Ploegsteert, to which place the left of the 3rd A.C. shortly withdrew." "The terrific fighting of the end of October and beginning of November may be considered as taking place," Lord Ernest says, "in three distinct sections, viz., the South Army, the Cavalry Corps, and the North Army."

In "The Indian Corps in France" (page 42), we are told that during the First Battle of Ypres "the line east of Messines and Armentières to a front west of Radhinghem was held by General Allenby's Cavalry Corps and General Pulteney's 3rd Corps, with General Conneau's French Cavalry on its right." The writers of this book then go on to describe the relief of the French Cavalry under General Conneau by the Jullundur Brigade. At the beginning of March the same writers tell us that in the Battle of Neuve Chapelle, "the 3rd Corps, under General Pulteney, occupied its old position opposite Armentières, whence the line was continuing southwards from Estaires to the west of Neuve Chapelle by the 4th Corps, under General Rawlinson." In the Battle of Loos General Pulteney's 3rd Corps was near Bois Grenier. Of the later operations of the 3rd Army Corps up to 1918 we have no particulars at hand, but these quotations will show to some extent where General Pulteney was in the early part of the Great War.

VANDELEUR, CECIL FOSTER SEYMOUR, Lieut., was born 11 July, 1869, and was gazetted to the Scots Guards as Second Lieutenant 6 Feb. 1889, becoming Lieutenant 23 May, 1892. He was employed in the Uganda Protectorate 11 Aug. 1894, to 26 Aug. 1896, and served in the Unyoro Expedition, 1895 (Despatches and Medal). For the Nandi Expedition, 1895–96, he was mentioned in Despatches and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 3 Nov. 1896]: "Cecil Foster Seymour Vandeleur, Lieut., Scots Guards. In recognition of services during the recent operations against slave-trading Arabs in the Uganda Protectorate." He was personally decorated by the Queen at Windsor 24 Nov. 1896. He was on Special Extra Regimental Employment 28 Nov. 1896, to 5 April, 1897, and took part in the operations on the Niger in 1897; in the Expeditions to Egbon, Bida and Ilorin. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 11 June, 1897]; was given the Brevet of Major 25 June, 1899, and received the Medal with clasp. He was employed with the Egyptian Army 24 Dec. 1897, to 8 Dec. 1899; served in the Nile Expedition of 1898, and was present at the battles of the Atbara and Khartum (slightly wounded). He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 30 Sept. 1898]; received the 4th Class Medjidie, and two clasps to the Egyptian Medal. He became Captain 24 June, 1899, and was on Special Service, South Africa, from 17 Oct. 1899. He was promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel, and was killed 31 Aug. 1901. Sir Arthur Conan Doyle says, in his "Great Boer War" (page 467), when describing train-wreckings by the Boers: "Another train disaster of an even more tragic character occurred near Waterval, fifteen miles north of Pretoria, upon the last day of August. The explosion of a mine wrecked the train, and a hundred Boers who lined the banks of the cutting opened fire upon the derailed carriages. Colonel Vandeleur, an officer of great promise, was killed, and twenty men, chiefly of the West Riding Regt., were shot. Nurse Page was also among the wounded. It was after this fatal affair that the regulation of carrying Boer hostages upon the trains was at last carried out."

Lieut.-General Sir Ivor Maxse wrote a biography, "Seymour Vandeleur," in the concluding pages of which he says: "Men of Seymour Vandeleur's stamp do not die in their beds, and it is in accordance with the life they have chosen that they should meet death in the discharge of duty and in the service of their country. But in Vandeleur's case it is bitter to think that when the end came he did not fall in the fair field of battle, where his life had been risked on so many occasions. To be the victim of a pitiful highway robbery, murdered in cold blood without the chance of reprisal by a dastardly scoundrel who wrecked trains for loot—such is not the kind of death which his friends can contemplate without a feeling of vengeance in their hearts. Yet, after all, it is a man's life not his death that matters, and the memory of Seymour Vandeleur as he was—a bright, ambitious, happy companion—still lingers with those who follow his calling and sympathize with his spirit. To them he will ever remain an example of straight, young manhood, and of a life spent in the pursuit of that which is best and highest in the profession he loved, heedless of any notoriety it might happen to bring him. To those who have read this memoir of his short career it will be obvious that he possessed a tenacious purpose through life, that he was rapidly developing along the natural lines of his character, and that he had emerged, a distinct personality, from the junior ranks of the Army. But by those who worked with him for years in different places and had the best opportunities of judging his strength, Vandeleur's death is recognized as a distinct loss to his country. Viewed in this light it was a public calamity, though this was known to few outside his profession. . . . One purpose of this book is to afford to Vandeleur's countrymen a glimpse of what is being done by hundreds of picked officers, who are the real builders of the Dependencies and Crown Colonies of our Empire. They long ago laid the foundations upon which our Indian Dominion was reared; they are now toiling ceaselessly and successfully in such places as Somaliland, Uganda, East Africa, Nigeria, the Egyptian Sudan—in fact wherever the Union Jack flies. Sometimes recognized but more often snubbed by official England, their names are unknown to the British public, and rightly so, because men should not acquire notoriety for merely doing their duty well. Their reward is in the knowledge that they are sowing seed which will ripen into an abundant harvest whose true value will be appreciated by future generations of Britons. When, however, one of their number is cut off in the prime of his manhood and with his promise unfulfilled, it is meet that the story of his life should be recorded, as an instance of the toll exacted by Empire and a reminder to us who sit at home that there still are men whose pride it is to render service to the State." On pages 56 and 57 of "Seymour Vandeleur" there is an account of the death of Capt. Dunning, D.S.O., who was mortally wounded during the expedition against Kabarega.

He commanded the Mafeking Relief Force in May, 1900. After describing the state of affairs in Mafeking, Sir A. Conan Doyle says, on pages 315–317 of "The Great Boer War":

Bryan Thomas Mahon.

"So in a small blaze of glory ended the historic siege of Mafeking, for Eloff's attack was the last, though by no means the worst, of the trials which the garrison had to face. Six killed and ten wounded were the British losses in this admirably managed affair. On 17 May, five days after the fight, the relieving force arrived, the besiegers were scattered, and the long-imprisoned garrison were free men once more. Many who had looked at their maps and saw this post isolated in the very heart of Africa had despaired of ever reaching their heroic fellow-countrymen; and now one universal outbreak of joybells and bonfires from Toronto to Melbourne proclaimed that there is no spot so inaccessible that the long arm of the Empire cannot reach it when her children are in peril. Colonel Mahon, a young Irish officer who had made his reputation as a cavalry leader in Egypt, had started early in May from Kimberley with a small but mobile force consisting of the Imperial Light Horse (brought round from Natal for the purpose), the Kimberley Mounted Corps, the Diamond Fields Horse, some Imperial Yeomanry, a detachment of the Cape Police, and 100 volunteers from the Fusilier Brigade, with M Battery, R.H.A., and pom-poms —twelve hundred men in all. Whilst Hunter was fighting his action at Rooidam on 4 May, Mahon with his men struck round the western flank of the Boers and moved rapidly to the northward. On 11 May they had left Vryburg, the halfway house, behind them, having done one hundred and twenty miles in five days. They pushed on, encountering no opposition save that of nature, though they knew that they were being closely watched by the enemy. At Koodoosrand it was found that a Boer force was in position in front, but Mahon avoided them by turning somewhat to the westward. His detour took him, however, into a bushy country, and here the enemy headed him off, opening fire at short range upon the ubiquitous Imperial Light Horse, who led the column. A short engagement ensued, in which the casualties amounted to thirty killed and wounded, but which ended in the defeat and dispersal of the Boers, whose force was certainly very much weaker than the British. On 15 May, the relieving column arrived without further opposition at Masibi Stadt, twenty miles to the west of Mafeking. In the meantime Plumer's force upon the north had been strengthened by the addition of C Battery of four 12-pounder guns of the Canadian Artillery under Major Eudon and a body of Queenslanders. These forces had been part of the small army which had come with General Carrington through Beira, and after a detour of thousands of miles, through their own wonderful energy they had arrived in time to form portion of the relieving column. Foreign military critics, whose experience of warfare is to move troops across a frontier, should think of what the Empire has to do before her men go into battle. These contingents had been assembled by long railway journeys, conveyed across thousands of miles of ocean to Cape Town, brought round another two thousand or so to Beira, transferred by a narrow-gauge railway to Bamboo Creek, changed to a broader gauge to Marandellas, sent on in coaches for hundreds of miles to Bulawayo, transferred to trains for another four or five hundred miles to Ootsi, and had finally a forced march of a hundred miles, which brought them up a few hours before their presence was urgently needed upon the field. Their advance, which averaged twenty-five miles a day on foot for four consecutive days over deplorable roads, was one of the finest performances of the war. With these high-spirited reinforcements and with his own hardy Rhodesians Plumer pushed on, and the two columns reached the hamlet of Masibi Stadt within an hour of each other. Their united strength was far superior to anything which Snyman's force could place against them. But the gallant and tenacious Boers would not abandon their prey without a last effort. As the little army advanced upon Mafeking they found the enemy waiting in a strong position. For some hours the Boers gallantly held their ground, and their artillery fire was, as usual, most accurate. But our own guns were more numerous and equally well served, and the position was soon made untenable. The Boers retired past Mafeking and took refuge in the trenches upon the eastern side; but Baden-Powell with his war-hardened garrison sallied out, and, supported by the artillery fire of the relieving column, drove them from their shelter. With their usual admirable tactics their larger guns had been removed, but one small cannon was secured as a souvenir by the townsfolk, together with a number of wagons and a considerable quantity of supplies. A long rolling trail of dust upon the eastern horizon told that the famous siege of Mafeking had at last come to an end."

Col. Mahon was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 9 Feb. and 16 April, 1901], received the Queen's Medal with three clasps, and was created a C.B. He was Military Governor, Kordofan from 1901 to 1904; became Colonel 12 April, 1904; commanded a 2nd Class District in India 12 April, 1904, to 11 April, 1908; became Major-General 1 Dec. 1908, commanded a Division in India 16 Aug. 1909, to 15 Aug. 1913; was created a K.C.V.O. in 1911, and promoted to Lieutenant-General 4 Sept. 1912. He served in the European War from 1914; was G.O.C., 10th (Irish) Division, New Armies, and 10th Division, Mediterranean Expeditionary Force, 24 Aug. 1914, to 27 Oct. 1915. He was Commander-in-Chief, Salonika Army, 28 Oct. 1915, to 9 May, 1916, and Commander-in-Chief in Ireland 15 Nov. 1916, to June, 1918. Sir Bryan Mahon served in the B.E.F., France, from Sept. 1918, to April, 1919. He was appointed Colonel, 8th Hussars, 7 March, 1910; is a K.C.B., and was made a Privy Councillor, Ireland, in 1917. His favourite recreations are shooting, hunting, polo and pig-sticking and steeple-chase riding.

MORGAN, HILL GODFREY, Capt., was born 20 June, 1862, son of the late Capt. Hill Faulconer Morgan, 28th Foot. He joined the 1st Gloucestershire Regt. (28th) from the Militia in 1883, and transferred to the Army Service Corps in 1888, as Captain. Capt. Morgan served in the Dongola Expeditionary Force in 1896–8, being present at the operations of 19 Sept.; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 3 Nov. 1896], and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 17 Nov. 1896]: "Hill Godfrey Morgan, Capt., Army Service Corps. In recognition of services during the recent operations in Egypt and the Sudan." For his services in this campaign he also received the 4th Class Medjidie, the British Medal and the Khedive's Medal with two clasps. He served in the Nile Expedition, including Khartum (Despatches, 30 Sept. 1898, 4th Class Osmanieh, clasp). He served in the South African War, 1899–1902, as Director of Supplies; operations in Natal, 1899; Relief of Ladysmith, including action at Colenso; operations of 17–24 Jan. 1900, and action at Spion Kop; operations of 5–7 Feb. 1900, and action at Vaal Kranz; operations at the Tugela Heights 14–27 Feb. 1900, and action at Pieters Hill; operations in Natal (March to June, 1900); operations in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, 1900, including action at Belfast; operations in the Transvaal, Orange River Colony and Cape Colony, 30 Nov. 1900, to 31 May, 1902. He was mentioned in Despatches (Sir G. S. White, 2 Dec. 1899; Sir R. H. Buller, 30 March and 9 Nov. 1900) [London Gazette, 8 Feb. 1901] and 29 July, 1902; was given the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel, Queen's Medal with six clasps, King's Medal with two clasps, created a C.B. He was promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel on 3 Feb. 1905; was given the Brevet of Colonel, and retired 7 Nov. 1906. During the European War Colonel Morgan served from Aug. 1914, as Assistant Director of Supplies, Central Force, and from Jan. 1915, as Administrative Member, Forage Committee. He was mentioned three times for services, promoted Brigadier-General 1919; created a C.M.G. in 1918 and a Knight of the British Empire in 1919 (War Medal). Sir H. G. Morgan married in 1886, Fanny, daughter of the late J. Bousfield, of Grassmere, Craneswater Park, Southsea.

GRIFFITH, GEORGE RICHARD, Capt., was born 5 July, 1857; joined the Army Veterinary Department 26 May, 1880, and served in the Egyptian Expedition of 1882, being present at the actions of El Magfar, Masameh and Kassassin, Battle of Tel-el-Kebir and forced march to Cairo (Medal with clasp; Bronze Star). He served in the Sudan Expedition of 1884–85, Nile, and received a clasp; and again in the Sudan in 1888–91, Suakin, as Principal Veterinary Surgeon. Action at Gemaizah; mentioned in Despatches, clasp. Action of Toski (clasp). Capture of Tokar, Feb. 1891 (4th Class Osmanieh; clasp to Bronze Star). He served in the Expedition to Dongola, 1896, as Principal Veterinary Officer; operations of 7 June and 19 Sept.; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 3 Nov. 1896]; received the Egyptian Medal with two clasps; was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 17 Nov. 1896]: "George Richard Griffith, Veterinary Capt., Army Veterinary Department. In recognition of services during the recent operations in Egypt and the Sudan." For the Nile Expedition of 1898 he was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 30 Sept. 1898], received the 3rd Class of the Medjidie, was granted the next higher rate of pay of rank; the Medal and a clasp to the Egyptian Medal. He served also in the Nile Expedition of 1899 (clasp to Egyptian Medal). He became Lieutenant-Colonel 12 Dec. 1903; was Principal Veterinary Officer, Egyptian Army, and retired 20 Nov. 1908, entering the Reserve of Officers. Lieut.-Colonel Griffith married, in 1909, Alice Maud, eldest daughter of the Rev. G. D. Redpath, of Harbledown.

George Richard Griffith.

BEATTY, DAVID, Lieut., Royal Navy, was born in 1871, son of Capt. D. L. Beatty, of Borodale, County Wexford. He entered the Royal Navy in 1884; was employed on the Nile, in the Sudan, in co-operation with the Egyptian Army under the Sirdar, Sir H. Kitchener, K.C.B., and rendered excellent service in getting the gunboats over the cataract. He was second in command of the flotilla at the forcing of the Dervishes' batteries at Hafir, and exposed to a heavy fire. He took command of the flotilla on Commander Colvin being wounded, and fought the gunboats in front of the enemy's batteries most persistently and successfully, eventually bombarding their position at Dongola and dismounting their guns. For this service he was mentioned in Despatches and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 17 Nov. 1896]: "David Beatty, Lieut., Royal Navy. In recognition of services during the recent operations in the Sudan." He was mentioned in Despatches by the Sirdar for services with the gunboats employed on the Nile during the operations of 1893 in the Sudan, including the battles of Atbara and Khartum (Medal; promoted to Commander, and awarded the 4th Class of the Order of the Medjidie, 1898). As Commander of the Barfleur he showed exceptional tenacity in endeavouring, with 200 bluejackets, to capture the Chinese guns that caused considerable trouble to the forces and inhabitants at Tien-tsin, June, 1900. He managed to get close to the guns, but a heavy fire therefrom necessitated withdrawing his force. Although twice wounded, he still led his men in the attack. He was promoted to Captain in Nov. 1900, for these services. On 28 April, 1905, he was created an M.V.O., and on 5 Nov. 1908, was appointed Aide-de-Camp to the King. He became Rear-Admiral 1 Jan. 1910; was created a C.B. on the Coronation of King George V. 19 June, 1911. From 8 Jan. 1912, to Feb. 1913, he was Naval Secretary to the First Lord of the Admiralty. During the Naval Manœuvres in July, 1912, he was Rear-Admiral commanding the Sixth Cruiser Squadron, with his flag in H.M.S. Aboukir. He was Rear-Admiral commanding the First Cruiser Squadron from 1 March, 1913, and on 22 June, 1913, was created a K.C.B. On 3 Aug. 1914, he was promoted to Acting Vice-Admiral. Vice-Admiral Sir David Beatty, in H.M.S. Lion, commanded the force engaged with the German Squadron in Heligoland Bight on 28 Aug. 1914, which resulted in the destruction of the German cruisers Mainz, Ariadne and Köln, and several destroyers. Some extracts from the London Gazette of 28 Aug. 1914, read as follows:

"THE BATTLE OF THE 'BIGHT.'

"Submarines:—Commodore Roger Keyes, in the destroyer Lurcher, in company with the destroyer Firedrake, and submarines D2, D8, E4, E5, E6, E7, E8, E9, of the 8th Submarine Flotilla, proceeded at midnight on 26 Aug. to take part in the operations in the Bight of Heligoland arranged for on the morning of 28 Aug. At daybreak on 28 Aug. the Lurcher and Firedrake searched the area through which the battle-cruisers were to advance for hostile submarines, and then proceeded towards Heligoland in the wake of submarines E6, E7, E8, which were exposing themselves with the object of enticing the enemy to chase them to the westward. The other submarines were allotted in favourable positions to attack enemy's forces where the opportunity presented itself.

"Destroyers:—The Arethusa, with 1st and 3rd Flotillas, under the command of Commodore Reginald Tyrwhitt, left harbour at 5 a.m. on 27 Aug. H.M.S. Fearless joined the flotilla at sea on the same afternoon. At daybreak on 28 Aug. the operations commenced. At 6.52 a.m. enemy's destroyers were sighted and chased by the 4th Division of the 3rd Flotilla. From 7.20 to 7.57 the Arethusa and 3rd Flotilla were engaged with numerous enemy T.B.D.'s and T.B.'s, which were making for Heligoland; course was altered to cut them off from their base. At 7.57 two cruisers, with four and two funnels respectively, were sighted, the nearest of which was engaged. The Arethusa received a heavy fire from both these cruisers and several destroyers until 8.15 a.m., when the four-funneller transferred her fire to the Fearless. Close action continued with the two-funnelled cruiser until 8.25 a.m., when a 6-in. projectile from the Arethusa landed on the fore bridge of the enemy's ship, who turned away at once in the direction of Heligoland, which now hove in sight on the starboard bow. Commodore Tyrwhitt then ordered all his force to turn to the westward, and speed was reduced to 20 knots. During this action Arethusa was hit many times and considerably damaged; one 6-in. gun only remained in action; all other guns and tubes were temporarily disabled. Fearless reported the 3rd and 5th Divisions of 1st Flotilla had sunk the German destroyer V187, which carried the Commodore of the German Flotilla. At 10.55 a four-funnelled German cruiser was sighted, who opened a heavy fire on Arethusa. The Fearless and 1st Flotilla were ordered to attack her; this was carried out with great spirit, and the cruiser turned away and disappeared in the haze. At 11.10 the same cruiser reappeared on the starboard quarter of the British force, and was heavily engaged by Arethusa and Fearless, the former's guns being now in working order. Simultaneously one division of destroyers attacked her with torpedoes, but without success. Apparently she was feeling the effect of this concentrated fire from Arethusa and Fearless, for she turned away in the direction of Heligoland. Commodore Tyrwhitt continued leading his force to the westward, and, four minutes later, sighted S.M.S. Mainz, a light cruiser of the Köln class, who endured a heavy fire from Arethusa, Fearless, and many destroyers; after an action lasting twenty-five minutes she was seen sinking by the head with engines stopped, and besides being on fire. At this moment our light-cruiser squadron appeared, and very speedily reduced the Mainz to an indescribable condition. The Fearless and destroyers were then recalled, and orders to cease fire were given. The battle-cruisers now joined up, sank a four-funnelled cruiser, and set another on fire.

"Battle-Cruisers:—We will now follow the vicissitudes of the battle-cruisers from the time they put to sea on the morning of the 27th. At 5 a.m., 27 Aug., the 1st Battle-Cruiser Squadron and 1st Light-Cruiser Squadron left harbour and steered for the rendezvous to meet the Invincible and New Zealand. Nothing of interest occurred until the following morning. At 4 a.m., 28 Aug., the destroyers under Commodore Tyrwhitt commenced operations as described above, with the battle-cruisers and light-cruisers in support. The Invincible and New Zealand joined up at the prearranged rendezvous at 11 a.m. The battle-cruisers were unsuccessfully attacked by three enemy submarines shortly after 11 a.m. Commodore Tyrwhitt and Commodore Keyes signalled to Admiral Beatty that they were in need of assistance. Admiral Beatty then sent the Light-Cruiser Force to support Arethusa and the destroyers. At 11.30 a.m. Admiral Beatty, anxious as to the welfare of Commodore Tyrwhitt and his force, left his rendezvous and proceeded at full speed E.S.E. to render assistance. He felt himself justified in risking attack from enemy submarines, thanks to his speed, and he calculated that he was powerful enough to take on any force which might come out. Enemy's battleships need not be taken into account, as they would take time to get steam up, locate him, and bring him to action; there again he had the legs of them. 12.15 p.m.—He sighted the Fearless and 1st Flotilla retiring west, and observed his Light-Cruiser Squadron engaging an enemy's cruiser (the Mainz) ahead. He then altered course to the N.E., and at 12.30 sighted the Arethusa and 3rd Flotilla retiring to the westward, engaging a cruiser of the Kolberg class (Köln). Course was shaped to cut her off from Heligoland. At 12.37 opened fire on her; she steered N.E., and Admiral Beatty chased at 27 knots. 12.56 p.m.—Sighted and engaged a two-funnelled cruiser ahead. The Lion fired two salvoes at her which took effect; she disappeared into the mist, burning furiously and in a sinking condition. Admiral Beatty considered it inadvisable to pursue her further, owing to floating mines having been reported by our destroyers to the eastward. He then turned his battle-cruiser north, and circled to port to finish off the previously engaged Köln. She was sighted once more at 1.25 p.m., steering south with colours flying. The Lion opened fire with two turrets, and at 1.35 she was sunk. Four destroyers were sent to pick up the survivors, but none could be found, although the area was thoroughly searched. At 1.40 p.m. the battle-cruisers turned north and covered the retirement of our light forces. At 6 p.m., the retirement having been well executed and all our destroyers accounted for, a sweep was carried out to the northward. The force was then dispersed to their respective bases."

Sir David Beatty was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 21 Oct. 1914].

Mr. A. H. Bullen says in "The Navy in Battle" (pages 84–85): "In . . . the affair off Heligoland the torpedo figures largely, because visibility was limited to about 6,000 yards. The affair off Heligoland cannot be described as an engagement. It was primarily a reconnaissance in force developed into a series of skirmishes and single ship actions, which began at seven in the morning and ended at mid-day. Submarines, destroyers, cruisers of several types, and, finally, battle-cruisers were employed on the British side. There were sharp artillery engagements between destroyers, there were torpedo attacks made by destroyers on light cruisers and by submarines on battle-cruisers. But they were not massed attacks on ships in formation, but isolated attempts at marksmanship, and they were all of them successful. This failure of the torpedo as a weapon of precision is of considerable technical interest. The light thrown on gunnery problems by the events of the day is less easy to define. The chief interest of this raid into the Bight lies in the strategical idea which prompted it and its moral effects on the British and German naval forces. That Sir David Beatty, in command of four battle-cruisers, should coolly have challenged the German fleet to fight, and that this challenge was not accepted, was extremely significant. It was of special value to our side, for it showed the British Navy to possess a naval leader who knew how to combine dash and caution and marked by a talent for leadership as conspicuous as the personal bravery which had won him his early promotions. These qualities were still better displayed in the engagement of the Dogger Bank." Sir David Beatty also commanded the force engaged with the German battle and armoured cruisers, light cruisers and destroyers, off the Dogger Bank, 24 Jan. 1915, when the Blucher was sunk and other vessels severely injured [London Gazette, 3 March, 1915]. Mr. A. H. Bullen says in "The Navy in Battle" (pages 84 and 85): "This action (the engagement of the Dogger Bank) is remarkable in several respects. For the first time destroyers were here employed to make massed torpedo attacks on a squadron of capital ships. The particular defensive functions of such torpedo attacks will be discussed in the proper place. Suffice it to say here that no torpedo hit, but that the British were robbed of victory by a chance shot which disabled Sir David Beatty's flagship, and deprived the squadron of its leader at a time when bold leadership was most needed."

Commander the Hon. Barry Bingham, V.C., R.N., says in "Falklands, Jutland and The Bight" (pages 133–134): "Things seemed as peaceful as could be on the afternoon of Tuesday, 30 May, when Maurice Bethell and I went ashore for a round of golf at Bruntsfield, near Edinburgh. After a thoroughly enjoyable game over this course, whose delightful inland surroundings reflected all the charm of early summer, we adjourned for tea to 'Rospletha'—the little house I had rented on the side of the links—and then found our way down to Queensferry Pier at the regulation hour of 6 p.m., in order to catch the routine boat. While we stood waiting on the pier amid a throng of fellow-officers, all eyes were suddenly drawn in the direction of the Lion, from whose masthead there floated a string of flags with this message to all ships: 'Raise steam for 22 knots and bank fires at half an hour's notice.' Next, observing the significance of the fact that this signal was being made to the seaplane-carrier ships, we not unnaturally concluded that a Pemberton-Billing benefit or air-raid picnic was about to develop. In this state of mind we reached our various ships. Before another half an hour had elapsed the bustling activity and constant changes of signals on board the flagship produced throughout the other ships that atmosphere of suppressed excitement which is the herald of great events. Clearly some further change of plans was in the air. Another half-hour, and then up went those flags for the last time that evening, bearing the message: 'Raise steam for full speed with all despatch.' There was now not a shadow of doubt that something considerably more than an air-picnic was impending. . . . Steaming at high speed eastwards in the direction of the Skagerrack, the force found itself at noon on the following day (May 31st) in a position approximately 120 miles west of the north coast of Jutland. . . . It was a glorious sunny day, the sea almost a dead calm, the atmosphere clear and conducive to good visibility." There is a stirring account of the battle and of the crippling of the Nestor and preparations to leave the doomed ship. "These orders were rapidly executed, and there was still time on our hands, for nothing had as yet happened. By a brilliant inspiration, Bethell then suggested to me that the cables might be ranged on deck—ostensibly for use in case of a friendly tow, but in reality to keep the men busy to the last. This suggestion I readily accepted, and the hands were still thus employed when the end came. . . . It was clear that the doomed Nestor was sinking rapidly, and at that moment I gave my last order as her commander, 'Abandon ship.' The motor-boat and Carley floats were quickly filled; and as the dinghy was badly broken up by shell fire, there seemed to remain for me only the possibility of a place in the whaler. Bethell was standing beside me, and I turned to him with the question: 'Now where shall we go?' His answer was only characteristic of that gallant spirit: 'To Heaven, I trust, sir!' As she sank, her sharp stern and stockless anchors alone visible, we gave our gallant but cruelly short-lived Nestor three rousing cheers and sang 'God save the King.' A reverential pause followed, broken almost immediately by the voice of a typical A.B.: 'Are we down-'earted? No!' Then: 'Wot abart Tipperary?' His words and spirit were infectious, and all joined lustily in the chorus of that hackneyed but inspiring modern war song." Such were the officers and such the men who won for us the Battle of Jutland.

Mr. A. H. Bullen says in "The Navy in Battle" (pages 85–86): "The Battle of Jutland eclipses in interest all the other engagements put together. It presents, of course on a far larger scale, all the problems hitherto met separately. We are still far too imperfectly informed as to many of the incidents of this battle for it to be possible to attempt any complete analysis of its tactics, or to indicate the line on which judgment will ultimately declare itself. We are, for example, entirely without information either about the method of deployment prescribed by the Commander-in-Chief of the Grand Fleet at six o'clock, or of the theory on which the night attack by the destroyers on the retreating German Fleet was ordered. We do not know how it was that a misunderstanding arose between the battle-cruiser fleet and the battle fleet as to the time and place of junction, nor the arrangements which resulted in contact with the German Fleet being lost after the action was over."

For his services in the Battle of Jutland Bank, 31 May, 1916, Admiral Beatty was created a K.C.V.O. and was mentioned by Sir John Jellicoe in his Despatch (dated 6 July, 1916): "Sir David Beatty once again showed his fine qualities of gallant leadership, firm determination, and correct strategic insight. He appreciated the situations at once on sighting first the enemy's lighter forces, then his battle cruisers, and finally his battle fleet. I can fully sympathize with his feelings when the evening mist and fading light robbed the Fleet of that complete victory for which he had manœuvred and for which the vessels in company with him had striven so hard. The services rendered by him, not only on this, but on two previous occasions, have been of the very greatest value."

Admiral David Beatty wrote to Admiral Sir Hedworth Meux after the action: "We drew the enemy into the jaws of our Fleet. I have no regrets, except for the gallant comrades, all pals, that have gone, who died gloriously. It would have warmed your heart to see the gallant Hood bring his squadron into action. . . . We are ready for the next time. Please God it will come soon. The Battle Cruiser Fleet is alive, and has got a very big kick in her."

The "Times" Naval Correspondent says in the "Times" of Friday, 7 July, 1916, in commenting on Admiral Jellicoe's Despatch: "This candid relation of the great event, with its accompanying sketch-plan, supplies convincing testimony to the judgment and skill displayed by those in high command, the courage and competency of the ships' companies, and the high standard of efficiency of the Fleet as a whole. Tried in the stern ordeal of battle, British seamen proved themselves to be inspired by the dauntless spirit of their forefathers, and showed how, under the new conditions and with the new material of warfare, they were superior in technical proficiency to their German opponents, and knew their business better. . . . It is revealed that we used for the first time a seaplane in a fleet action, and Sir David Beatty refers to the possibility of Zeppelins being used by the enemy for scouting. Although the importance of a sea battle is not to be assessed solely by the material damage done on either side, it is shown in the list of enemy ships lost or seriously disabled which Sir John Jellicoe supplies that, even when measured by this standard, our position is stronger than it ever was before. We can much better afford to lose capital ships than the Germans, and yet absolutely as well as relatively, their losses were greater than ours. It is the human interest to be found in these narratives which must strongly appeal to everyone. There were many glorious and inspiring incidents during both the day and night fighting—incidents which had no exact counterpart in the old wars. The explanation is to be found in the large number of small vessels engaged, and the anecdotes of gallantry and heroism, of cool leading and hard fighting, both in the small craft and in the bigger units, make conspicuous features in the story of the battle. Among the more striking of the larger movements there are three which stand out prominently and which will be famous for ever. Splendid as was the manner in which Sir David Beatty took the offensive, and pressed it in the face of overwhelming force, the way in which he utilized his speed to turn the van of the enemy at six o'clock affords a shining example of technical insight and masterly resolution. By this manœuvre he obtained more favourable conditions of visibility than the enemy, enabling us to punish them very severely and establish a definite superiority over them. The head of their line was crumpled up under the fire of the battle-cruisers, admirably supported by the Fifth Battle Squadron, commanded by Rear-Admiral Hugh Evan-Thomas. The handling of the Third Battle-Cruiser Squadron by the intrepid and lamented Hood was another fine feat. It is thus described by Sir David Beatty: 'I ordered them to take station ahead, which was carried out magnificently, Rear-Admiral Hood bringing his squadron into action ahead in a most inspiring manner, worthy of his great ancestors.' Finally, there is the movement of which the Commander-in-Chief writes: 'I formed the Battle Fleet in line of battle on receipt of Sir David Beatty's report, and during deployment the fleets became engaged.' Imagine the situation! The reports of guns were audible and flashes of fire were visible from right ahead to the starboard beam, but in the mist no ship could be distinguished. The positions both of friends and enemies were known only by signal, and there were other circumstances which added to the uncertainty. Yet with unerring judgment and magnificent courage, Sir John Jellicoe swung his huge battle fleet across the bows of the advancing enemy, enabling him to bring a concentrated fire upon the leading ships of Von Scheer's fleet. This turn in the battle—the climax, as it proved—is shown on the sketch-plan to have occurred about seven o'clock. No wonder that after this the enemy's tactics were all of a nature generally to avoid further action. Although the engagement between the battle fleets lasted intermittently for two hours, the enemy constantly turned away and obscured the range by smoke-screens. His vessels were seen to be constantly hit; some were observed to fall out of line, and one at least to sink, while the damage done to our own ships was insignificant. It must have been with a feeling of relief that the Germans learnt next morning that on the first occasion in which they had been unable to avoid a conflict with our main fleet they had escaped complete annihilation. Thus were the traditions of the Senior Service worthily upheld, and if the cloud of witnesses are as near to us as St. Paul thought, the spirits of Nelson and Drake and Blake and the Hoods must have looked on well pleased at their successors and descendants; at the Admirals that are—and were—and the Admirals 'yet to be.' Nelson—some of whose mantle has surely fallen on Lord Beatty—with his swiftness of decision, his power of calculating chances, and taking risks which were hardly risks at all, he knew the game so well. This war seems to have brought the dead nearer to us, so many young and splendid souls have passed unfaltering through fire and space and deep waters to the other side. And if Drake and Nelson are as near us as Sir Henry Newbolt and Admiral Fisher think, why then, they must have been well pleased at that day's work. And they must have welcomed on the farther shore those who died so gloriously for their King and country and their fellow-men. Great Britain shall not perish while these her sons remain to her—while, rent asunder by dissensions, Nationalists, Ulstermen, Scotsmen, Welsh and English make common cause against a common enemy. These great seamen—some of them—have died, but their names shall live for ever—the youngest midshipman who went down in the Queen Mary—the Boy, Jack Cornwell—Arbuthnot and Hood. Seamen and Admirals, they gave all they had to give—their lives. Surely the cloud of witnesses rejoiced that day! There are no tears on that farther shore, nor any pain. There was nothing but rejoicing. Greater love hath no man than this; and the souls of the righteous are in the hand of God.

"'Admirals all, they said their say,
And its echoes are ringing still.
Admirals all, they went their way
To the haven under the hill.'"

Sir David Beatty was created a G.C.B. in 1916, and a G.C.V.O. in 1917. He commanded the Grand Fleet from 1916. He was created an Earl in 1919. Earl Beatty is a Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour; and he holds the Order of St. George of Russia (4th Class). He married in 1901, Ethel, only daughter of Marshall Field, senior, of Chicago, and they have two sons.

FITTON, HUGH GREGORY, Capt., was born 15 Nov. 1863, at Gloucester Crescent, Hyde Park, London, W., son of Edward Brown Fitton, Barrister and Inspector of Factories, and Harriet Margaret Fitton. Operations in Orange River Colony (May to 29 Nov. 1900). Operations in Cape Colony, south of Orange River, 1899–1900. Operations in the Transvaal and Cape Colony, Dec. 1900, to April, 1901. Operations in Orange River Colony 30 Nov. to Dec. 1900. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 16 April, 1901], received the Queen's Medal and three clasps, and was created a C.M.G. In 1901 Capt. Watson returned to the Egyptian Army, and he became Major 19 Oct. 1902, retired 3 May, 1905, and was 1st A.D.C. to H.H. The Khedive of Egypt from 1905 to 1914. He was created a C.V.O. in 1912. Lieut.-Colonel J. K. Watson served in the European War from 1914; was Military Attaché, Egypt, from 1916; was mentioned in Despatches, given the Legion of Honour, and created a C.B.E. in 1919. He married, in 1902, Katherine Emelia, daughter of H. C. Nisbet, of The Old House, Wimbledon, and they have one son.

GORRINGE, GEORGE FREDERICK, Lieut., was born at Southwick, Sussex, 10 Feb. 1868, second son of Hugh Gorringe, J.P., Kingston-by-Sea, Sussex, and of Mrs. Hugh Gorringe. He was educated at Lee's School, Brighton, and at Wellington College, and joined the Royal Engineers at Chatham 17 Feb. 1888, becoming Lieutenant 17 Feb. 1891. He was employed with the Egyptian Army 14 Jan. 1893, to 21 Dec. 1899, and was employed as D.A.A.G., Headquarters Staff, in the Expedition to Dongola in 1898, taking part in the operations of 7 June and 19 Sept. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 3 Nov. 1896], received the Egyptian Medal with two clasps (Firket and Hafir), and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 17 Nov. 1896]: "George Frederick Gorringe, Lieut., Royal Engineers. In recognition of services during the recent operations in the Sudan." He served in the Nile Expedition of 1897, on the Staff of the G.O.C. (Despatches [London Gazette, 25 Jan. 1898]; Brevet of Major 18 Feb. 1899; clasps to the Egyptian Medal [Abu Hamed]). In the Nile Expedition of 1898 he served as Staff Officer, Headquarters Staff, and was present at the battle of the Atbara as D.A.A.G., Headquarters Staff; at the battle of Khartum and subsequent operations at Gedarif. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 24 May and 30 Sept. 1898], received the 4th Class of the Medjidie, the Medal, and two clasps to the Egyptian Medal (Atbara, Abu Hamed and Gedarif). He became Captain 17 Feb. 1899, and in that year served in the Nile Expedition and was present in the operations resulting in the final defeat of the Khalifa, commanding irregulars at actions of Abu Adel and Om Devrikat (Despatches [London Gazette, 30 Jan. 1900]; Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 14 March, 1900; two clasps to Egyptian Medal). He was specially employed in charge of the reconstruction of Khartum. He served in the South African War 23 Dec. 1899, to 1 Nov. 1901, as A.D.C. to Lord Kitchener; as D.A.A.G., Headquarters Staff, and in command of a flying column and of the Loyal Farmers' Light Horse (1 Jan. to 12 Oct. 1901). He was present at the operations in Cape Colony, Jan. to March, 1900, and April, 1900. Operations in Orange Free State, Feb. 1900, and March to May, 1900. Operations in Orange River Colony, May and June, 1900. Operations in the Transvaal, May to 29 Nov. 1900. Operations in the Transvaal 30 Nov. to Dec. 1899. Operations in Orange River Colony, Dec. 1900, and Aug. 1901. Operations in Cape Colony, Dec. 1900, to Oct. 1901. (Despatches [London Gazette, 16 April and 9 July, 1901]; Queen's Medal and four clasps; created a C.M.G.). Sir A. Conan Doyle tells us, in Chapter XXXV. of "The Great Boer War," how in the spring of 1901 in Cape Colony "Kritzinger's original force broke into many bands. . . . The total number of Boers who were wandering over the eastern and midland districts may have been about two thousand, who were divided into bands which varied from fifty to three hundred. The chief leaders of separate commandos were Kritzinger, Scheepers, Malan, Myburgh, Fouché, Lotter, Smuts, Van Reenen, Lategan, Maritz and Conroy, the two latter operating on the western side of the country. To hunt down these numerous and active bodies the British were compelled to put many similar detachments into the field, known as the columns of Gorringe, Crabbe, Henniker, Scobell, Doran Kavanagh, Alexander, and others. These two sets of miniature armies performed an intricate devil's dance over the Colony. . . . At the beginning of August the connected systematic work of French's columns began to tell. In a huge semicircle the British were pushing north, driving the guerillas in front of them. Scheepers, in his usual wayward fashion, had broken away to the south; but the others had been unable to penetrate the cordon, and were herded over the Stormberg–Naauwport line. The main body of the Boers was hustled swiftly along from August 7 to August 10, from Graaf Reinet to Thebus, and thrust over the railway line at that point with some loss of men and a great shedding of horses. It was hoped that the block-houses on the railroad would have held the enemy, but they slipped across by night, and got into the Steynsburg district, where Gorringe's Colonials took up the running. On August 13 he followed the commandos from Steynsburg to Venterstad, killing twenty of them and taking several prisoners." The rest of the chapter, describing the work done by the British flying columns, makes very interesting reading. Major Gorringe was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 16 April and 9 July, 1901], received the Queen's Medal with four clasps; was created a C.M.G., and given the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 14 March, 1900. In 1904 he was in command of the operations at Jebel Jerok in Southern Sennar, receiving a clasp (Jerok) to the Egyptian Medal, and the Brevet of Colonel 10 Feb. 1904; 3rd Class Osmanieh, 1904. He was promoted to Colonel 23 June, 1906, and was Director of Movements and Quartering at the War Office 23 June, 1906, to 31 March, 1909. Brigade Commander, 18th Brigade, Northern Command, 1 April, 1909, to 5 Dec. 1911; promoted to Major-General 6 Sept. 1911; commanding Bombay Brigade, India, 1 May, 1912, to 31 March, 1915. From 1 April, 1915, to 10 March, 1916, he commanded the 12th Division, Indian Expeditionary Force, Mesopotamia, in the operations in Southern Arabistan and the Euphrates Valley, terminating with the capture of Nasiriyeh. He was mentioned in Despatches and created a K.C.B.; was temporary Lieutenant-General from 11 March, 1916, to 22 Sept. 1916; was Chief of Staff, Tigris Force, Jan. 1916, to March, 1916; commanding the 3rd Indian Army Corps, Kut Relief Force, 11 March, 1916, to 10 July, 1916. From 20 Sept. 1916, to 1919, Sir G. F. Gorringe commanded the 47th Division, British Armies in France. He was created a K.C.M.G. in 1918. His favourite recreations are hunting, polo and shooting.

General Townshend remarks on page 39 of "My Campaign in Mesopotamia": "The new 12th Division, under the command of General Gorringe, could not be called complete, as it had no artillery." On page 87 he says: "Gorringe had taken Nasiriyeh on 24th July, after a stubborn resistance of a week or so on the part of the Turks, the bulk of whom retreated north along the Hai, and were said to have united with Nureddin's force at Kut-el-Amara." In the entry in his diary for October 3rd Sir Charles Townshend writes: "We are now some 380 miles from the sea, and we have only two weak divisions, including my own, in the country! There is my division to do the fighting, and Gorringe's to hold the line of communications from Kut to the sea. Thus there is no possible support to give me if I receive a check." On page 256 Sir Charles says: "It was plain that Aylmer could do nothing to aid me until reinforcements reached him. Sir Percy Lake, the Commander-in-Chief in Mesopotamia, who was at Basra, evidently took the same view." Sir Percy suggested that General Aylmer should establish himself on the best position he could, holding both banks of the river, with the bridge connecting them behind him, and there unload all his river-craft and send them back empty. "Gorringe had been sent to Amarah to organize the reinforcements as they arrived there from Basra, and send them on to Aylmer. The date on which these reinforcements would arrive depended on the rapidity with which Aylmer could free his river-craft." On the 12th March Major-General Gorringe succeeded to the command of the Tigris Corps, that gallant soldier, Sir Fenton Aylmer, V.C., having been superseded by the War Office. But really a General's only chance of not being superseded in that inhospitable country was to go out of existence. It is only the strategist—amateur or otherwise—in the War Office who can sit unmoved and limpet-like while unfriendly waves and billows of criticism wash over his official rock. Many pages of General Townshend's book are devoted to General Gorringe's magnificent efforts to win through to his relief. In Lord Kitchener's speech after the fall of Kut and very shortly before his death, he said: "No praise would seem extravagant for the troops under Sir Percy Lake and Sir George Gorringe, and that they did not reap the fruit of their courage and devotion is solely due to the circumstances which fought against them."

GIROUARD, EDOUARD PERCY CRANWILL, Lieut., was born at Montreal 26 Jan. 1867, son of the late Hon. Desiré Girouard. He was educated at the Royal Military College, Kingston, and was gazetted to the Royal Engineers as Second Lieutenant 28 July, 1888; becoming Lieutenant 28 July, 1891. He was Railway Traffic Manager, Royal Arsenal, 1 July, 1890, to 14 Aug. 1895, and was employed with the Egyptian Army as Director of Sudan Railways 10 April, 1896, to 11 Sept. 1898. He served with the Dongola Expeditionary Force, 1896, as Director of Railways, taking part in the operations of 19 Sept. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 8 Nov. 1896], received the Egyptian Medal with clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 17 Nov. 1896]: "Edouard Percy Cranwill Girouard, Lieut., Royal Engineers. In recognition of services during the recent operations in the Sudan." The Insignia, Warrant and Statutes were sent to the G.O.C., Cairo, and presented 25 Jan. 1897. He served in the Nile Expedition of 1897, was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 25 Jan. 1898], received the clasp to the Egyptian Medal, and was given the Brevet of Major 29 July, 1899, being promoted to Captain 28 July, 1899. For the Nile Expedition of 1898 he received a Medal. He was President of the Egyptian Railway Board, 1898 and 1899 (2nd Class Medjidie). In the South African War he served on the Staff from 1899 to 1902, as Director of Railways. Operations in Natal, 1899. Advance on Kimberley. Operations in the Orange Free State Feb. to May, 1900. Operations in the Transvaal in May and June, 1900. Operations in Orange River Colony May to 29 Nov. 1900. Operations in Cape Colony, south of Orange River, 1899-1900. Operations in Cape Colony, north of Orange River. Operations in the Transvaal, Orange River Colony and Cape Colony. One comes across him in Sir A. Conan Doyle's "Great Boer War": "Roberts's main column kept on the railroad, which was mended with extraordinary speed by the Railway Pioneer Regt. and the Engineers, under Girouard and the ill-fated Seymour. It was amazing to note the shattered culverts as one passed, and yet to be overtaken by trains within a day." In describing Methuen's search for De Wet, Sir A. Conan Doyle says on pages 348–349: "That wily and indefatigable man was not long out of our ken. On June 14 he appeared once more at Rhenoster, where the construction trains, under the famous Girouard, were working furiously at the repair of the damage which he had already done. This time the guard was sufficient to beat him off, and he vanished again to the eastward. He succeeded, however, in doing some harm, and very nearly captured Lord Kitchener himself. A permanent post had been established at Rhenoster under the charge of Colonel Spens of the Shropshires, with his own regiment and several guns. Smith-Dorrien, one of the youngest and most energetic of the divisional commanders, had at the same time undertaken the supervision and patrolling of the line. An attack had at this period been made by a commando of some hundred Boers at the Sand River to the south of Kroonstad, where there is a most important bridge. The attempt was frustrated by the Royal Lancaster Regt. and the Railway Pioneer Regt., helped by some mounted infantry and yeomanry. The fight was for a time a brisk one, and the Pioneers, upon whom the brunt of it fell, behaved with great steadiness. The skirmish is principally remarkable for the death of Major Seymour of the Pioneers, a noble American who gave his services and at last his life for what, in the face of all slander and misrepresentation, he knew to be the cause of justice and liberty." For his services in the South African War Brevet Major Girouard was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 8 Feb. and 19 April, 1901, and 29 July, 1902]. He received the Queen's Medal with three clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a K.C.M.G. He was Commissioner of Railways, Transvaal and Orange River Colony, 1 July, 1902, to 21 Dec. 1904; was given the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 7 Nov. 1904; was A.Q.M.G., Western Command, 6 Sept. 1906, to 2 Feb. 1907; High Commissioner and Commander-in-Chief, Northern Nigeria, 3 Feb. 1907, to 6 May, 1908; Major, Royal Engineers, 26 May, 1908; Governor and Commander-in-Chief, Northern Nigeria, 7 May, 1908, to 1909; Brevet Colonel 13 Sept. 1908; Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the East Africa Protectorate, 1909–12; retired from the Royal Engineers 13 July, 1912; has been on the Board, Elswick Works, Newcastle, since 1912. He has published a "History of the Railways during the War in South Africa." Sir Percy Girouard married, in 1903, Mary Gwendoline (who divorced him in 1914), only daughter of the late Hon. Sir Richard Solomon, and they had one son.

Colonel Repington says, in "Vestiagia" (pages 105 and 106), that at the time of the decision to send an Expedition to Dongola, "Sarras was the terminus of the railway southward from Wadi Halfa, and as the navigation of the river was impeded by rapids, it was determined to push on the railway, which was eventually to terminate at Kerma, close to Dongola, as a temporary measure. After combats at Firket and Hafir, and after the overcoming of serious difficulties owing to cholera and storms, Dongola was occupied on 23 Sept., and a few days later the historic town of Merowi, at the foot of the Fourth Cataract, was taken. Then came the important decision to construct a railway across the desert from Wadi Halfa to Abu Hamed, an enterprise which made the fame of Percy Girouard and his able young assistants, and when this railway was about two-thirds of the way across the desert Kitchener determined to occupy Abu Hamed from Merowi, and after a sharp fight General Hunter carried out the plan with entire success. Berber, having been evacuated by the dervishes, was occupied by the Egyptian Army at the end of Aug. 1897, and the continuation of the railway from Abu Hamed to Berber was at once taken in hand. In Dec. Kassala was occupied by an Egyptian force under Colonel Parsons, and the chess-board was now set out for the decisive operations."

FATHY BEY, Miralei, served in the Sudan, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order (honorary) [London Gazette, 17 Nov. 1896]: "Fathy Bey, Miralei, Egyptian Army. In recognition of services during the recent operations in the Sudan." The Insignia, Warrant and Statutes were sent to the G.O.C., Cairo, and presented on 25 Jan. 1897.

London Gazette, 7 May, 1897.—"War Office, 7 May, 1897. The Queen has been graciously pleased to give orders for the following appointments to the Distinguished Service Order . . . in recognition of the services of the undermentioned Officers during the operations in South Africa, 1896."

HALE, CHARLES HENRY, Surgeon-Capt., was born at Eastbourne, Sussex, 9 March, 1863, second son of G. W. Hale, M.A., Trinity College, Cambridge, and Mrs. Hale (deceased). He was educated at Plymouth Grammar School, and became Captain, R.A.M.C., 5 Feb. 1887. Capt. Hale served in South Africa, 1890–7, was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, March, 1897], and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 7 May, 1897]: "Charles Henry Hale, Surgeon-Capt., Royal Army Medical Corps. In recognition of services during the recent operations in South Africa, 1896." The Insignia were presented to him by the Queen at Windsor 19 May, 1897. He became Major, 5 Feb. 1899; served in the South African War, 1901–1902, taking part in the operations in Orange River Colony, March, 1901, to 31 May, 1902. Operations in Cape Colony, Feb. to March, 1901–02 (Queen's Medal with 4 clasps). He became Lieutenant-Colonel 7 June, 1911. Lieut.-Colonel Hale served in the European War from 1914; became Colonel 1 March, 1915; Assistant Director of Medical Services 28 April, 1915, to 28 Dec. 1915, and D.A.M.S., 9th Corps, to the evacuation of Suvla Bay, and then D.D.M.S., 8th Corps, to the evacuation of Cape Helles; created a C.M.G. 1916, for services in Gallipoli. Colonel Hale retired on retired pay 23 May, 1917. He is a widower, and has one daughter, Eva Willes Hale, married to Lieut.-Colonel E. Kerans, The Worcester Regt.

Charles Henry Hale.

EVELEIGH-DE-MOLEYNS, FREDERICK ROSSMORE WAUCHOPE, Capt. The Hon. (Lord Ventry), was born 11 Dec. 1861, eldest son of the 4th Baron Ventry and Harriet (who died in 1906), daughter of Andrew Wauchope, Niddrie Marischal, Midlothian. He was educated at Harrow, and was gazetted to the 4th Hussars 9 Sept. 1882; was A.D.C. to the Governor and Commander-in-Chief, Victoria, 1889–90; became Captain 1 May, 1890, and was Adjutant, 4th Hussars, 10 May, 1893, to 19 May, 1896. He served in South Africa in 1896–97, acting as extra Staff Officer, and was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 9 March, 1897]. He was in general command of the troops in 1897, was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 18 Feb. 1898], was given the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 20 May, 1898, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 7 May, 1897]: "The Hon. Frederick Rossmore Wauchope Eveleigh-de-Moleyns, Capt., 4th Hussars. In recognition of services during the recent operations in South Africa, 1896." The Insignia were presented by the Deputy Commissioner at Salisbury, South Africa, 14 Aug. 1897, at a parade of the Forces at Salisbury. He became Major 2 March, 1898, and retired in 1901 as Lieutenant-Colonel. He became Commissioner of Police in Mashonaland. He succeeded his father as 5th Baron Ventry in 1914.

NICHOLSON, JOHN SANCTUARY, Capt., was born in London 19 May, 1863, second son of W. Nicholson, of Basing Park, Alton, Hampshire, and of Mrs. W. Nicholson. He was educated at Harrow, was gazetted to the 7th Hussars as Lieutenant 6 Feb. 1884, and became Captain 23 Jan. 1891. He was on special service in South Africa, and acted as Staff Officer in the operations in Matabeleland in 1896, under General Carrington. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 9 March, 1897], received the Medal, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 7 May, 1897]: "John Sanctuary Nicholson, Capt., 7th Hussars. In recognition of services during the recent operations in South Africa, 1896." He was Commandant-General of the British South African Police (which he raised), 25 Nov. 1898, to 22 Oct. 1900; became Major 27 May, 1899, and served in the South African War, 1899–1902, first in command of the B.S.A. Police, and afterwards in command of the 1st Brigade, Rhodesia Field Force. Colonel Nicholson served in the European War from 1914, holding a special appointment (graded A.A.G., B.E.F.), 15 Sept. 1914, to 23 April, 1915; was Base Commandant, B.E.F., 24 April, 1915, to 1 Dec. 1916; was Temporary Brigadier-General 2 Dec. 1916, to 31 Dec. 1918, and Base Commandant, British Armies in France, 2 Dec. 1916, to 31 Dec. 1918. He was created a C.B.E. in 1919. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 16 April, 1901]; was given the Brevet of Lieut.-Colonel 29 Nov. 1900; received the Queen's Medal with four clasps and the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a C.B. Hon. Sir Neville Lyttelton), including the action of Bergendal. Subsequently he served successively as Staff Officer to a Mounted Infantry Column, and as D.A.A.G. to the Inspector-General of Mounted Infantry, and saw much service in the Transvaal and Orange River Colony. He was Staff Officer to Capt. Jenner's Column under Colonel Alderson. Brevet Major H. E. Vernon, D.S.O., died on 21 Sept. 1902. General the Hon. Sir Neville Lyttelton, Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, wrote: "He was one of the finest officers I have ever known in the regiment, both in peace and war." And again: "It was a sight to see him in action—a leader whom men would follow anywhere." Lord Roberts wrote: "He was an exceptionally promising officer." General Alderson, Inspector-General of Mounted Infantry in South Africa, wrote from Pretoria, Sept. 1902: "I have known him since 1894. He was with me in Rhodesia in 1896. I then saw what an exceptionally fine and dashing officer he was. For the last few months he has been one of my Staff officers, and I had got to appreciate his charming and upright personality and to realize his ability." He was a splendid horseman, equally at home in the hunting field or at polo. In 1898 and 1899 he played in several prominent polo matches. He was a keen sportsman all round, both after big game in India and Africa and small game at home. For the South African Campaign he received both South African Medals and seven clasps, and was several times mentioned in Despatches.

CAMPBELL, CHARLES, Capt., Royal Navy, was born at St. Andrews 26 March, 1847, eldest son of John Campbell, of Saddell. He was educated at Brenchley Vicarage, Staplehurst; at the Royal Naval Academy, Gosport, and entered the Britannia in 1860. He gained the diving prize for longest under water—one minute, 53 seconds (then a record). He joined H.M.S. Magicienne under Prince Leiningen; served in the Marlborough, Mediterranean Flagship, and after seeing service in the Amphion, Royal Oak and Racer, he joined, in 1868, Galatea, under H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, and made a trip round the world. He was Flag-Lieutenant to Admirals Campbell and Lord John Hay. He was present at the insurrection in Crete; at the taking of Cyprus; was Transport Officer during Lord Wolseley's Campaign against Arabi Pasha (Egyptian Medal and Khedive's Star); appointed to command H.M.S. Lily; then in the Philomel in command of the East Coast of Africa. He suppressed the uprisings at Lamu and Witu; seized the Palace at Zanzibar; commanded the road-cutting party to Nana's stronghold, four days under fire, and led the centre attack; was created a C.B., and received the African Medal. In the Theseus he went to Benin, and was Second in Command of the Expedition against the King. He saved 27 wounded from the fire that swept the city, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 25 May, 1897]: "Charles Campbell, C.B., Capt., Royal Navy. In recognition of services during the recent Expedition to Benin." He was Second in Command to Admirals Harris and Noel during the operations in Crete, 1897–99; commanded Medway Gunnery School, 1899–1902; was A.D.C. to Queen Victoria and to King Edward 1899 to Jan. 1902. Rear-Admiral C. Campbell married (1st), Esther Constance, daughter of Colonel J. O. Fairlie, of Coodham, Ayrshire, and (2ndly), Florence Geraldine, daughter of Colonel A. E. Ross. He died 8 Feb. 1911, and an obituary notice of him appeared in the "Times" of 10 Feb. 1911.

BACON, REGINALD HUGH SPENCER, Commander, was born in 1863, son of the Rev. T. Bacon and Emma, daughter of George Shaw. He was educated in H.M.S. Britannia; entered the Britannia, 1877; received a silver medal from the Italian Government for saving life at the wreck of the Utopia in 1891; Commander H.M.S. Theseus; Chief of the Intelligence Department, Benin Expedition, 1897; received the Medal and Clasp; was mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 25 May, 1897]: "Reginald Hugh Spencer Bacon, Commander, Royal Navy. In recognition of services during the recent Expedition to Benin." Commander Bacon started the submarine boat service in the Royal Navy; was Naval Assistant to the First Sea Lord of the Admiralty, 1905; created a C.V.O., 1907; Captain of H.M.S. Dreadnought during her first commission; A.D.C., 1909; Director of Naval Ordnance and Torpedoes, 1907–9. He retired in Nov. 1909, to take the post of managing director of the Coventry Ordnance Works, 1910–14; resigned the appointment, and was gazetted Colonel, Second Commandant, R.M.A., 1915; commanded Heavy Howitzer Brigade, R.M.A., with Expeditionary Force in France; appointed to command the Dover Patrol, 1915, to 31 Dec. 1917; promoted Vice-Admiral; created a K.C.B. and a K.C.V.O., 1916; promoted Admiral, 1918. From Feb. 1918, to March, 1919, he was Controller of the Inventions Department of the Ministry of Munitions. Sir Reginald Bacon is the author of "Benin, the City of Blood," and of "The Dover Patrol, 1915–1917." His favourite recreation is shooting. He is a Deputy-Lieutenant for Hampshire. He married, in 1894, Cicely, daughter of Henry Surtees, of Redworth, and they have one daughter.

Sir Reginald Bacon wrote a book called "The Dover Patrol" (published by Messrs. Hutchinson). The chapter headed "Matters of Strategy" begins thus:

"'Well, Bill, all I knows about strategy is what I 'eard the old man (the Admiral) say, 'ow that the strategy of these 'yer Straits was so to dispose 'is destroyers as to prevent the enemy knowing as 'ow 'e 'adn't got none.'"

At the beginning of another chapter is:

"THE NAVY AND THE GUNS.

"The Navy, through the 'istory of Britain's bloody wars,
'As always helped the Army with 'er blooming Ordnance Stores.
They've landed guns to help them, and I'd 'ave you know, m'lad,
They were always one size larger than what the Army 'ad.

"During the Indian Mutiny the Army cheered us when
Peel landed 'is ole broadside to be lugged by sailor-men.
The Boer War saw us up-to-date when Percy Scott, by 'eavens,
'E made extempore mountings for the naval four-point-sevens.

"The Army's got a 'Mother,' and they've got a 'Grannie,' too,
So we 'ave got our work cut out to do as we should do.
It must be a reg'lar whopper, so bear a hand, my men,
For we'll land our largest twelve-inch, the fifty-ton mark ten."

In the preface Admiral Bacon says: "It is interesting to speculate how the historical verdict of years to come will differ from current opinions on the conduct of the late war at sea. Full credit will certainly be given to those who were responsible for the existence of the Grand Fleet, for the superior armament of its ships over those of the enemy, and for its concentration in the North Sea. Three names are indissolubly associated with this foresight. First and foremost, the historian will remember Lord Fisher, to whose genius and almost uncanny prevision we owe the all-big gun ship of high speed. . . . He prepared for the birth and sturdy growth of the Grand Fleet, which in the grim end the Germans found facing them on the day of battle. Mr. Reginald McKenna was closely associated with this development; in fact, it was generally credited at the time that for three days he was practically outside the Cabinet while fighting the Navy's battle at what, in reality, was the most critical period of our history. Then Mr. Churchill carried on the work, and, in our day of peril, with his characteristic courage, authorized without hesitation the mobilization of the Fleet at a moment when hesitation might have appeared to be excusable, but would have been fatal. For these reasons these three names in particular will be indissolubly associated in history with our battle-fleet supremacy during the war—with that Grand Fleet appropriately so-called. There it lay at Scapa, in the North Sea, with every muscle strained and nerve vibrating. It was like a spear poised in the hand of a giant, ready to be hurled at the wild beast offending against humanity should he venture from his den. Once he crawled out, and Lord Jellicoe's far-reaching victory of Jutland dealt him a blow which sent him snarling back with many wounds which, eventually festering from inactivity and broken hopes and lowered pride, led to his dishonourable and inglorious end. And what of Dover? That is the story with which this book is concerned. The Grand Fleet was in the far North; Commodore Tyrwhitt had a force based on Harwich, and then, farther south, was the Dover Patrol, which held the southern exit from the North Sea, as the Grand Fleet may be said to have held the northern exit."

In describing "The Drifters and their Tasks and their Appliances, in Vol. II., page 419, Sir Reginald Bacon says: "Many minor improvements of the gear were made and employed, but without doubt the most successful adjunct to the nets was 'the net-mine,' invented by Admiral of the Fleet Sir A. K. Wilson, V.C. This electrically-fired mine proved of immense value, and completely revolutionized the method of employing the nets. It was really the combination of two instruments of destruction deadly to submarines—the net and the mine."

Admiral Bacon says that the Dover drifters "were manned by ordinary everyday fishermen, who in war-time had been suddenly called upon to face the enemy and work new nets on new methods under fire, their divisions being commanded by gallant officers of the Royal Naval Reserve.

Digitized by Google

They worked as thoroughly, steadily and pluckily as if fighting was their trade. After the raid of 26–27 Oct. 1916, they went on with their duty of watching the nets as steadily as before. They had fought the sea all their lives, and they fought the enemy with equal confidence. They continued to patrol with the thinnest of support, since the waters in the forefront of the patrol, with their varied vital interests, were too extensive to admit of real support being given to them; no larger vessels could be spared, so the bulk of the vidette work fell on the gallant little drifters. This work they cheerfully did, and earned a reputation of which they may always be proud. May good luck attend them! No officer of the Dover Patrol will ever pass a 'Dover' drifter without going on board, and wishing her skipper and crew good luck in remembrance of their old association in the Great War."

"One of the chief events at Dover was the inspection of the patrol by H.M. the King. It may be difficult for some persons, perhaps, in these extremely democratic days to realize how much good this visit did to the patrol. Hitherto officers and men of the patrol had looked on their work as prosaic. True, they were at war, and were doing their bit; but the fact of the King thinking it worth while to come to Dover and inspect the various activities at once brought home to them the national importance of their services in a way that nothing else could have done, and their morale was greatly strengthened. The trawler and drifter crews valued immensely the fact that the King boarded one of each of these craft, and examined the details of their accommodation and their war appliances. I was glad to have the opportunity of presenting Lieut.-Commander Gartside Tipping to His Majesty, as the oldest officer serving afloat. Next day he was killed in action with the King's congratulations still fresh in his mind."

"We won the war, not of ourselves, but by virtue of that vast procession of seamen and sea-fighters, from the forerunners of Hubert de Burgh down to our own fathers—men of the Royal Navy, the merchant traders, the fishermen, whose sea-blood has been transmitted to us through male and female forbears. It is the bestowal of sea instinct by heredity from our sea-folk of the past centuries that is the sure shield of our Empire against all assailants on the sea."

London Gazette.—"War Office, 11 March, 1898. The Queen has been pleased to give orders for the following appointments to the Distinguished Service Order, and promotions in the Army, in recognition of the services of the undermentioned Officers while attached to the Egyptian Army during the recent operations in the Sudan, resulting in the capture of Abu Hamed and the subsequent occupation of Berber. To be Companions of the Distinguished Service Order."

KEPPEL, COLIN RICHARD, Commander, Royal Navy, was born 3 Dec. 1862, in London, son of the late Admiral of the Fleet the Hon. Sir Henry Keppel and Lady Keppel, daughter of Martin West, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, and Lady Maria West. He joined H.M.S. Britannia in 1875; was Midshipman of Inconstant during the Egyptian War of 1882 (Egyptian Medal; Khedive's Bronze Star); Sub-Lieutenant of Invincible; served with the Naval Brigade landed for service in the Sudan; with the Nile Expedition for the relief of General Gordon at Khartum 1884–85; present in the S.S. Sophis with Lord C. Beresford at the relief of Sir C. Wilson. He most highly distinguished himself. Lord Charles Beresford thus speaks of him in his Despatch: "I consider that we owe our safety on the steamer, as well as the safety of Sir C. Wilson and his party, who undoubtedly would have been killed if the steamer had been destroyed, to the untiring energy of Sub-Lieut. Keppel." The correspondent of the "Army and Navy Gazette" says: "Then came a characteristic piece of calculated audacity. Lord Charles noticed that a nuggar in which Sir Charles Wilson had escaped from the wreck of his steamer, had drifted down with some of Gordon's men on board, and had stranded close to the fort. The hero of the Condor sent Keppel with a small boat and half a dozen blue-jackets to the rescue. They cut her out under the very guns and brought her safely off, Keppel being hit in the groin, but luckily only by a spent, or more probably a ricochet, bullet." He was wounded, promoted to Lieutenant for this service (Nile, 1884; five clasps). Appointed to be Equerry to H.R.H. Admiral the Duke of Edinburgh 28 Dec. 1886. He was appointed Extra Equerry Jan. 1896. Flag-Lieutenant to His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh when Commander-in-Chief in the Mediterranean, 1886–89, and at Plymouth Aug. 1899 to June, 1893; lent to Egyptian Government for service on the Nile, 1897–98; commanded the Flotilla on the Nile. Queen Victoria was pleased to give orders for the following appointment to the Distinguished Service Order "in recognition of the services of the undermentioned Officer, while attached to the Egyptian Army during the recent operations in the Sudan, resulting in the capture of Abu Hamed and the subsequent occupation of Berber. To be a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order, viz.: Commander Colin Richard Keppel, R.N., 11 March, 1898;" services in command of the gun-boats with the Nile Expedition, 1898, and was thus mentioned in Despatches by the Sirdar: "The exceptional services performed by Commander Keppel and his subordinate officers of the Royal Navy is deserving of special mention. These gun-boats have been for a long time past almost constantly under fire; they have made bold reconnaissances past the enemy's forts and rifle pits, and on the 1st and 2nd of Sept. aided in the capture of all the forts on both banks of the Nile, and in making the fortifications of Omdurman untenable. In bringing to notice the readiness of resource, daring and ability of Commander Keppel and his officers, I wish also to add my appreciation of the services rendered by Engineer E. Boyd, R.N., and the engineering staff, as well as of the detachment of the Royal Marine Artillery and the gun crews, who have gained the hearty praise of their commanders." Commander Keppel was again mentioned in Despatches after the fall of Khartum, and received the C.B. for his services on this occasion (1898). He was noted for promotion on having the requisite sea service (Medal and two clasps); promoted to the rank of Captain 30 May, 1899, and received the thanks of both Houses of Parliament, 1899, for services in the Sudan (1899); C.V.O. 3 April, 1906; Cross of the Order of Naval and Military Merit from the King of Spain; Rear-Admiral in Command of Atlantic Fleet, 1909–10. Admiral Keppel retired in 1913. He was created a K.C.V.O. in 1908 and a K.C.I.E. in 1911, and was appointed Serjeant-at-Arms, House of Commons, in 1915. Sir Colin Keppel is Extra Equerry to His Majesty, and was Equerry in Ordinary. He is a Director of Hawthorn, Leslie and Co., Engineers. Admiral Keppel married, in 1889, Henrietta Mary, daughter of Major-General R. Blundell, and they have two sons.

CAREW, GEORGE ALBERT LADE, Major, was born 10 March, 1862, son of the late Robert R. Carew and Mrs. Robert R. Carew. He was commissioned in the Hampshire Militia in 1879, and was gazetted to the 7th Hussars as Lieutenant (from the Militia) 31 Oct. 1883, becoming Captain 19 Dec. 1889, and Major 2 April, 1898. He took part in the operations in South Africa in 1896–97; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 9 March, 1897]; commanded a column in the campaign of 1897; was again mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 18 Feb. 1898]; received the Medals and clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 20 May, 1898]: "George Albert Lade Carew, Major, 7th Hussars. In recognition of services during the operations in Mashonaland in 1897." Insignia sent to G.O.C., Cape; forwarded by O.C., 7th Hussars, Natal, 24 July, 1898. He served with the Rhodesian Field Force, 1900, as Special Service Officer, and with the 7th Hussars, 1901–2, in the South African War. He took part in the operations in Rhodesia, March to May, 1900, and in the operations in the Transvaal, March to Aug. 1900; operations in the Transvaal, March to 31 May, 1902; operations in Cape Colony, Dec. 1901, to March, 1902. Major Carew retired in 1902.

London Gazette, 20 May, 1898.—"War Office, 20 May, 1898. The Queen has been graciously pleased to give orders for the following appointments to the Distinguished Service Order and promotions in the Army, in recognition of the services of the undermentioned Officers during the recent operations in Uganda."

KIRKPATRICK, RICHARD TRENCH, Capt., was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 20 May, 1898]: "Richard Trench Kirkpatrick, Capt., Leinster Regt. In recognition of services during the recent operations in Uganda." Capt. Kirkpatrick died 26 Nov. 1898.

HOBART, CLAUD VERE CAVENDISH, Lieut., was born 12 March, 1870, only son of Sir Robert Henry Hobart, Bart., K.C.V.O., C.B., Official Verderer of the New Forest, of Langdown, Hants, and of the Hon. Julia Trollope, eldest daughter of the first Baron Kesteven. He was educated at Eton and Sandhurst, and entered the Grenadier Guards 16 July, 1890. Lieut. Hobart, after serving nearly seven years in the Grenadier Guards, was in 1897 seconded for service in the Uganda Protectorate, at that time under the administration of the Foreign Office, and joined the Protectorate Forces, consisting chiefly of Sudanese, who had previously served under Emin Pasha at Wadelai, whilst on a punitive expedition in the Nandi country. Order having been restored, he was detailed to march two companies of Sudanese back to Headquarters at Kampala. On the way he received news of the disaffection of Mwanga, the native King of Uganda, who had raised the standard of revolt in Buddu, one of the southern provinces of his kingdom. He hastened on to the capital, and was thence despatched with his men in a fleet of canoes down the west coast of Victoria Nyanza to occupy and hold the crossing over the Katonga River, separating Buddu from the rest of Uganda, whilst the main forces of the Protectorate under Colonel T. P. B. Ternan, D.S.O., moved down overland. He successfully carried out his instructions, and the rebels were subsequently defeated in two engagements, at which he was present, which resulted in King Mwanga fleeing into German territory and the bulk of his followers dispersing into the wilds of Ankole. Lieut. Hobart was left in charge of the reconquered province with two and a half companies of Sudanese. These remained loyal during the subsequent mutiny of portion of the same force in the eastern part of the Protectorate, and though hard pressed at one time, he succeeded in holding his own against the Baganda rebels, who collected again on the news of the mutiny, being joined by the ex-King Mwanga, who contrived to escape from German custody. After several expeditions had been organized against them, in all of which he took part, he was fortunately enabled, whilst in command of an advanced guard composed of Baganda levies, to come up to and inflict a decisive blow on King Mwanga's main forces at Kisalera. Mwanga's ally, the rebel King of Koki, was killed, and Mwanga himself barely escaped, only to be captured a few months later in the north of the Protectorate with the remnants of the Sudanese mutineers, who were finally defeated with the assistance of a native regiment from India. For his services during the above operations he was mentioned in Despatches, and also in Parliament, and received the Uganda Medal and clasp. He was also created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 20 May, 1898]: "Claud Vere Cavendish Hobart, Lieut., Grenadier Guards. In recognition of the services during the recent operations in Uganda" (the first award of this Order to an officer of this regiment). On the outbreak of the South African War in 1899, Capt. Hobart had just returned to England, and was sent out with the first contingent of troops to the Cape to act as Staff Officer on the Midland Line of Communications. In this capacity he assisted in raising several corps of local volunteers, by whom the Midland Line of railway from Port Elizabeth to Naauwpoort was seized and garrisoned; but falling a victim to a severe attack of enteric fever, he was invalided home in the summer of 1900, subsequently receiving the Queen's South African Medal with clasp for Cape Colony. In 1902 Capt. Hobart officiated as a Gold Staff Officer at the Coronation of T.M. King Edward VII. and Queen Alexandra, and was also in charge of Apolo Kagwa, the native Prime Minister and Regent of Uganda, who came over to attend the ceremony, and for whom he interpreted on the occasion of his being granted an audience by King Edward. In Dec. 1906, Major Hobart retired from the Regular Army, and was placed on the Reserve of Officers; but in 1908, on the inauguration of the Territorial Force, he was appointed Lieut.-Colonel Commanding Princess Beatrice's Isle of Wight Rifles (8th Battn. The Hampshire Regt.), which he raised and reorganized from a small volunteer nucleus and commanded till 1913, when he retired. He again acted as Gold Staff Officer at a Coronation—that of T.M. King George V. and Queen Mary, in 1911. On the European War breaking out in 1914, Lieut.-Colonel Hobart, after serving for short periods on the Embarkation Staff at Southampton and the Military Landing Staff at Havre, was sent to the front in Flanders as a Railhead Commandant, being subsequently appointed Administrative Commandant of the railheads of an army. He was mentioned in Despatches in 1916 and 1918, and received the "1914" Star. Lieut.-Colonel C. V. C. Hobart married, on 10 Dec. 1900, at St. Peter's, Eaton Square, S.W., Violet Verve, second daughter of the late John Wylie, Esq., of West Cliff Hall, Hants, owner of the celebrated racing cutter Oimara, and they have one son, Robert Hampden, born 7 May, 1915.

London Gazette, 20 May, 1898.—"War Office, Pall Mall, 20 May, 1898. The Queen has been graciously pleased to give orders for the following appointments to the Distinguished Service Order, in recognition of the services of the undermentioned Officers during the recent operations on the North-West Frontier of India. To be Companions of the Distinguished Service Order."

SWAYNE, CHARLES HENRY, Lieut.-Colonel, was born at Carrick-on-Shannon, Ireland, 18 Sept. 1848, second son of the late Abraham Crawford Swayne, M.D., J.P., of Carrick-on-Shannon, and Anne, daughter of D. Brown. He was educated at a private school, and at the Ledwich School of Medicine, Dublin (Prizeman in Medicine, Surgery and Midwifery). He entered the Army as Staff Assistant Surgeon, 1872; served with distinction during the yellow fever outbreak in Trinidad, West Indies, 1881; in the Nile campaign, 1884–85, in charge of Dongola Field Hospital (thanked for services; Medal and clasp; Khedive's Star). He became Surgeon-Major, 1886; served in Burmese Campaign, 1886–89 (specially thanked for services; Medal and two clasps). He became Brigade Surgeon Lieut.-Colonel, 1897; was in charge of No. 6 B.F.H., and Senior Medical Officer, 1st Brigade, Tirah Expeditionary Force, N.W.P., 1897–98. He received the Medal and two clasps; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 3 April, 1898], and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 20 May, 1898]: "Charles Henry Swayne, Brigade Surgeon Lieut.-Colonel, Army Medical Service. In recognition of services during the recent operations on the North-West Frontier of India." The Insignia were sent to the Commander-in-Chief, India, and were presented by Sir B. Blood at Meerut 4 Nov. 1898. Lieut.-Colonel Swayne had been on leave until the 15th Oct., and the presentation was therefore delayed. Colonel Swayne says: "I have no record of the official account as to why I was granted the D.S.O. I was Senior Medical Officer, 1st Brigade, 1st Division, throughout the campaign, and presumed it was for good service as such that I was granted it. During the yellow fever epidemic, Trinidad, British West Indies, 1881, I was recommended for award for distinguished services by my P.M.O. and G.O.C. and the Governor of Trinidad, Sir Sandford Freeling, K.C.M.G. For the Nile Campaign, my P.M.O., Surgeon-General J. O'Nial, put my name forward to Lord Wolseley; but General Buller wrote to say that 'though Lord Wolseley knew I did good service, he could not recommend me for promotion, as he would have to do the same for others.' For the Burmese Campaign both the P.M.O.'s under whom I served for two and a half years also sent in my name, but no result. For the Tirah I did get mentioned in Despatches, and got the D.S.O." He became Lieut.-Colonel, Royal Army Medical Corps; Colonel, 5 Nov.

(Musketry), Headquarters, India, 4 June, 1906, to 19 June, 1908; Colonel, 4 June, 1907; Brigade Commander (Colonel on the Staff), India, 20 June, 1908, to 17 March, 1911; Major-General 19 June, 1911; created a C.B.; Colonel, 40th Pathans, 1911; Brigade Commander, India, 18 March, 1911, to 25 June, 1915; Divisional Commander, India, 26 June, 1915, to 25 June, 1919. He served in the war, 1914–16 (Despatches; created a K.C.B., and was promoted Lieut.-General); promoted General, 1919. He married, in 1886, Eleanor Martha, daughter of the late J. Cannon, and they have a son, Frederick Charles Gunning, M.C., Capt., 40th Pathans, born on 11 Aug. 1887, and a daughter, Eleanor May Alexandra, married, in 1916, to Capt. G. E. D. Learoyd, Adjutant, 21st (E. of I.) Lancers.

Frederick Campbell.

BIGGS, HENRY VERO, Capt., was born at Belgaum 9 May, 1860, third son of the late Colonel Thomas Biggs, R.A. (previously of the Bombay Artillery, who died in 1905), and Mary, daughter of the late Rev. W. Beynon. He was educated first at a private school at Clifton, and passed into the R.M.A., Woolwich, 1877; joined the R.E. 30 July, 1879; embarked for India, 1882, and was posted to the Bombay S. and M.; spent nearly three years on the Afghan Frontier (including the 1884 Zhob Expedition); served in the third Burmese War, 1885–87 (Medal with clasp); joined the Military Works from the S. and M., 1887. He became Captain, 1889; Adjutant, R.E., Tirah Expeditionary Force, 1897–98; operations on the N.W. Frontier, 1897; operations in the Kurram and on the Samana, the Chagru Kotal, capture of the Sampagha Pass and operations in the Khyber. He was mentioned in Despatches, received the Medal with three clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 20 May, 1898]: "Henry Vero Biggs, Capt., Royal Engineers, in recognition of services on the North-West Frontier of India." He became Major, 1898; Lieut.-Colonel, 1905; officiated A.A.G., R.E., India, 1906; Brevet Colonel, 1908; commanded R.E., 5th (Mhow) Division, 1906–7, 6th (Poona) and 2nd (Rawalpindi) Division, 1909–12; became Colonel 27 May, 1912; retired, Military Works, India (Royal Engineers), 29 Nov. 1912; re-employed on account of war, 1914 (Despatches [London Gazette, 24 Feb. 1917]). Colonel Bigg's favourite recreations are fishing and shooting, especially the big game of India. He married, Oct. 1887, at Kasauli, India, Frances Kate, eldest daughter of the late Colonel C. H. Ewart, B.S.C., and they have one son, Henry Ewart Biggs (born 28 June, 1893, at Secunderabad, India, now Captain, R.E. (permanent).

Henry Vero Biggs.

MILLER-WALLNUTT, CLAUDE CHARLES, Major, was born 30 March, 1861, and was gazetted to the 75th Foot 23 April, 1881, becoming Lieutenant, Gordon Highlanders, 1 July, 1881. He served in the Egyptian Expedition, 1882–84, and was present at the Battle of Tel-el-Kebir (Medal with clasp; Bronze Star); in the Sudan in 1884 he was present at the Battles of Teb and Tamai (two clasps). He served in the Sudan Expedition of 1884–85 (Nile), and received a clasp; became Captain 14 Jan. 1888. Chitral, 1895. In the Tirah Campaign he took part in the operations on the North-West Frontier of India in 1897–98, being present at the action of Dargai. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 1 March, 1898]; received two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 20 May, 1898]: "Claude Charles Miller-Wallnutt, Major, Gordon Highlanders. In recognition of services during the recent operations on the North-West Frontier of India." He was promoted to Major 18 May, 1898. Major Miller-Wallnutt served in the South African War, and was killed in action 6 Jan. 1900. Sir A. Conan Doyle says, in "The Great Boer War" (pages 175–177):

"At the same time as—or rather earlier than—the onslaught upon Cæsar's Camp a similar attack had been made with secrecy and determination upon the western end of the position called Waggon Hill. The barefooted Boers burst suddenly with a roll of rifle fire into the little garrison of Imperial Light Horse and Sappers who held the position. Mathias of the former, Digby-Jones and Dennis of the latter, showed that 'two in the morning' courage which Napoleon rated as the highest of military virtues. They and their men were surprised but not disconcerted, and stood desperately to a slogging match at the closest quarters. Seventeen Sappers were down out of thirty, and more than half the little body of irregulars. This end of the position was feebly fortified, and it is surprising that so experienced and sound a soldier as Ian Hamilton should have left it so. The defence had no marked advantage as compared with the attack—neither trench, sangar, nor wire entanglement—and in numbers they were immensely inferior. Two companies of the 60th Rifles and a small body of the ubiquitous Gordons happened to be upon the hill and threw themselves into the fray, but they were unable to turn the tide. Of thirty-three Gordons under Lieut. MacNaughten thirty were wounded. [The Gordons and the Sappers were there that morning to re-escort one of Lambton's 4.7 guns, which was to be mounted there. Ten seamen were with the gun, and lost three of their number in the defence.] As our men retired under the shelter of the northern slope they were reinforced by another hundred and fifty Gordons under the stalwart Miller-Wallnutt, a man cast in the mould of a Berserk Viking. To their aid also came two hundred of the Imperial Light Horse, burning to assist their comrades. Another half-battalion of Rifles came with them. At each end of the long ridge the situation at the dawn of day was almost identical. In each the stormers had seized one side, but were brought to a stand by the defenders upon the other, while the British guns fired over the heads of their own infantry to rake the farther slope.

"It was on the Waggon Hill side, however, that the Boer exertions were most continuous and strenuous and our own resistance most desperate. There fought the gallant De Villiers, while Ian Hamilton rallied the defenders and led them in repeated rushes against the enemy's line. Continually reinforced from below, the Boers fought with extraordinary resolution. Never will any one who witnessed that Homeric contest question the valour of our foes. It was a murderous business on both sides. Edwardes of the Light Horse was struck down. In a gun emplacement a strange encounter took place at point-blank range between a group of Boers and of Britons. De Villiers of the Free State shot Miller-Wallnutt dead, Ian Hamilton fired at De Villiers with his revolver and missed him.

Young Albrecht of the Light Horse shot De Villiers. A Boer named De Jaeger shot Albrecht. Digby-Jones of the Sappers shot De Jaeger. Only a few minutes later the gallant lad, who had already won fame enough for a veteran, was himself mortally wounded, and Dennis, his comrade in arms and in glory, fell by his side.

"There has been no better fighting in our time than that upon Waggon Hill on that January morning, and no better fighters than the Imperial Light Horsemen who formed the centre of the defence. Here, as at Elandslaagte, they proved themselves worthy to stand in line with the crack regiments of the British army.

"Through the long day the fight maintained its equilibrium along the summit of the ridge, swaying a little that way or this, but never amounting to a repulse of the stormers or to a rout of the defenders. So intermixed were the combatants that a wounded man more than once found himself a rest for the rifles of his enemies. One unfortunate soldier in this position received six more bullets from his own comrades in their efforts to reach the deadly rifleman behind him. At four o'clock a huge bank of clouds which had towered upwards unheeded by the struggling men burst suddenly into a terrific thunderstorm with vivid lightnings and lashing rain. It is curious that the British victory at Elandslaagte was heralded by just such another storm. Up on the bullet-swept hill the long fringes of fighting men took no more heed of the elements than would two bulldogs who have each other by the throat. Up the greasy hillside, foul with mud and with blood, came the Boer reserves, and up the northern slope came our own reserve, the Devon Regt., fit representatives of that virile county. Admirably led by Park, their gallant colonel, the Devons swept the Boers before them, and the Rifles, Gordons, and Light Horse joined in the wild charge which finally cleared the ridge.

"But the end was not yet. The Boer had taken a risk over this venture, and now he had to pay the stakes. Down the hill he passed, crouching, darting, but the spruits behind him were turned into swirling streams, and as he hesitated for an instant upon the brink the relentless sleet of bullets came from behind. Many were swept away down the gorges and into the Klip River, never again to be accounted for in the lists of their field-cornet. The majority splashed through, found their horses in their shelter, and galloped off across the great Bulwana Plain, as fairly beaten in as fair a fight as ever brave men were yet.

"The cheers of victory as the Devons swept the ridge had heartened the weary men upon Cæsar's Camp to a similar effort. Manchesters, Gordons, and Rifles, aided by the fire of two batteries, cleared the long-debated position. Wet, cold, weary, and without food for twenty-six hours, the bedraggled Tommies stood yelling and waving, amid the litter of dead and of dying.

"It was a near thing. Had the ridge fallen the town must have followed, and history perhaps have been changed. In the old stiff-rank Majuba days we should have been swept in an hour from the position. But the wily man behind the rock was now to find an equally wily man in front of him. The soldier had at last learned something of the craft of the hunter. He clung to his shelter, he dwelled on his aim, he ignored his dressings, he laid aside the eighteenth-century traditions of his pigtailed ancestor, and he hit the Boers harder than they had been hit yet. No return may ever come to us of their losses on that occasion; 80 dead bodies were returned to them from the ridge alone, while the slopes, the dongas, and the river each had its own separate tale. No possible estimate can make it less than 300 killed and wounded, while many place it at a much higher figure. Our own casualties were very serious, and the proportion of dead to wounded unusually high owing to the fact that the greater part of the wounds were necessarily of the head. In killed we lost 13 officers, 135 men; in wounded, 28 officers, 244 men—a total of 420. Lord Ava, the honoured son of an honoured father, the fiery Dick-Cunyngham, stalwart Miller-Wallnutt, the brave boy sappers Digby-Jones and Dennis, Adams and Packman of the Light Horse, the chivalrous Lafone—we had to mourn quality as well as numbers. The grim test of the casualty returns shows that it was to the Imperial Light Horse (ten officers down, and the regiment commanded by a junior captain), the Manchesters, the Gordons, the Devons, and the 2nd Rifle Brigade that the honours of the day are due."

THACKWELL, COLQUHOUN GRANT ROCHE, Capt., was born 8 Dec. 1857, and was gazetted to the 37th Foot 1 May, 1878, and transferred to the 51st Foot 12 June, 1878, becoming Lieutenant, South Yorkshire Regt., 29 Jan. 1879, and Bengal Staff Corps, 23 Feb. 1881. He served in the Mahsud–Wuzeeree Expedition, 1881, and in the Egyptian Expedition, 1882, Battle of Tel-el-Kebir (Medal and clasp); was promoted to Captain, Indian Staff Corps, 1 May, 1889. He served in the Chitral Campaign in 1895, with the Relief Force as Commissariat Officer, 2nd Brigade (1 April to Aug. 1895), and was present at the storming of the Malakand Pass (Medal and clasp). He served on the N.W. Frontier of India, 1897–98, Malakand, as Divisional Transport Officer (July to Oct. 1897); operations in Bajaur and in the Mamund country, Mohmand, Utman Khel and Buner, as Chief Transport Officer. He was present at the attack and capture of the Tanga Pass; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 11 Jan. and 22 April, 1898]; received a clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 20 May, 1898]: "Colquhoun Grant Roche Thackwell, Capt., Indian Staff Corps. In recognition of services during the recent operations on the North-West Frontier of India." The D.S.O. was presented to Major Thackwell, 11 Nov. 1898, by the G.O.C., Lahore District. He had been promoted to Major 1 May, 1898; became Lieut.-Colonel 1 May, 1904, and was given the Brevet of Colonel 1 May, 1907, and was promoted to Colonel 1 Dec. 1908. He was created a C.B. in 1912. Colonel Thackwell married Lilian, daughter of Robert Spencer.

ALRIGHT, HEDLEY, Capt., was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 20 May, 1898]: "Hedley Alright, Capt., Indian Staff Corps. In recognition of services during the recent operations on the North-West Frontier of India." The Insignia were presented by the Queen at Windsor 17 Nov. 1898. Capt. Alright died in March, 1903.

HALDANE, JAMES AYLMER LOWTHORPE, Capt., was born 17 Nov. 1862, only son of the late D. Rutherford Haldane, M.D., and Mrs. Haldane. He was educated at Edinburgh Academy and Wimbledon School, and passed with Honours, Royal Military College, Sandhurst, joining the Gordon Highlanders 9 Sept. 1882, as Lieutenant. He was Adjutant, Gordon Highlanders, 1 Sept. 1888, to 31 Jan. 1892, and became Captain 8 April, 1892. Capt. Haldane served in the Waziristan Expedition, 1894–95 (Medal with clasp), and in the operations in Chitral in 1895, with the Relief Force (Medal with clasp). He was A.D.C. to General Sir William Lockhart, 1896–99. In 1897–98 he served in the Tirah Expedition as D.A.A.G., Headquarters Staff, and was present at the actions of Chagra Kotal and Dargai, and at the capture of the Sampagha and Arhanga Passes. Reconnaissance at and around Dwatoi and action of 24 Nov. 1897. Operations against the Khani Khel Chamkanis. Operations in the Bara Valley 7 to 14 Dec. 1897. Operations in the Bazar Valley 25 to 30 Dec. 1897. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 5 April, 1898]; received two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 20 May, 1898]: "James Aylmer Lowthorpe Haldane, Capt., Gordon Highlanders. In recognition of services during the recent operations on the North-West Frontier of India." The Insignia were presented to him by the Queen at Windsor 25 June, 1898. He served in South Africa, 1899–1902, with the 2nd Gordon Highlanders, taking part in the operations in Natal in 1899, including the action at Elandslaagte, where he was severely wounded. He was in command of the Chieveley Armoured Train. Sir A. Conan Doyle says, in "The Great Boer War" (page 166): "The Boers suddenly took the initiative, and in dramatic fashion. North of Estcourt, where General Hildyard was being daily reinforced from the sea, there are two small townlets, or at least geographical (and railway) points. Frere is about ten miles north of Estcourt, and Chieveley is five miles north of that, and about as far to the south of Colenso. On 15 Nov. an armoured train was despatched from Estcourt to see what was going on up the line. Already one disaster had befallen us in this campaign on account of these clumsy contrivances, and a heavier one was now to confirm the opinion that, acting alone, they are totally inadmissible. As a means of carrying artillery for a force operating upon either flank of them, with an assured retreat behind, there may be a place for them in modern war, but as a method of scouting they appear to be the most inefficient and also the most expensive that has ever been invented. An intelligent horseman would gather more information, be less visible, and retain some freedom as to route. After our experience the armoured train may steam out of military history. The train contained 90 Dublin Fusiliers, 80 Durban Volunteers, and 10 sailors, with a naval 7-pounder gun. Capt. Haldane, of the Gordons, Lieut. Frankland (Dublin Fusiliers) and Winston Churchill, the well-known correspondent, accompanied the expedition. What might have been foreseen occurred. The train steamed into the advancing Boer army, was fired upon, tried to escape, found the rails blocked behind it, and upset. Dublins and Durbans were shot helplessly out of their trucks, under a heavy fire. A railway accident is a nervous thing, and so is an ambuscade, but the combination of the two must be appalling. Yet there were brave hearts which rose to the occasion. Haldane and Frankland rallied the troops, and Churchill the engine-driver. The engine was disentangled and sent on with its cab full of wounded. Churchill, who had escaped upon it, came gallantly back to share the fate of his comrades. The dazed, shaken soldiers continued a futile resistance for some time, but there was neither help nor escape and nothing for them but surrender. The most Spartan military critic cannot blame them. A few slipped away besides those who escaped upon the engine. Our losses were two killed, 20 wounded, and about 80 taken. It is remarkable that of the three leaders both Haldane and Churchill succeeded in escaping from Pretoria." Capt. Haldane was slightly wounded on this occasion. Operations in Natal, March to June, 1900, including action at Laing's Nek (6 to 9 June). Operations in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, July to 20 Nov. 1900, including actions at Belfast (26 and 27 Aug.) and Lydenberg (5 to 8 Sept.). He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 8 Feb. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with four clasps, and the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 24 July, 1902. He was promoted to Major 23 July, 1902. In 1904 and 1905 he was attached to the Japanese Army in Manchuria, during the Russo-Japanese War. He was present at the Battles of Liao-Yang, Sha-ho and Mukden, and received the Japanese War Medal and clasp, the Order of the Sacred Treasure (3rd Class), and was created a C.B. (1906). He was given the Brevet of Colonel 11 Jan. 1906, and became Colonel 29 Oct. 1906; was Assistant Director of Military Operations, Headquarters of Army, 29 Oct. 1906, to 30 Sept. 1909; was Brigadier-General, General Staff, Eastern Command, 1 Oct. 1909, to 27 April, 1912; Brigade Commander, 10th Brigade, Eastern Command, 28 April, 1912, to 4 Aug. 1912. He served in the European War from 5 Aug. 1914, as Brigade Commander, 10th Infantry Brigade, British Expeditionary Force, up to 20 Nov. 1914; as General Officer Commanding 3rd Division, British Expeditionary Force and British Armies in France, 21 Nov. 1914, to 7 Aug. 1916, and as Army Corps Commander, 6th Army Corps, British Armies in France, 8 Aug. 1916. He was promoted to Major-General 26 Oct. 1914; to Lieutenant-General 1 Jan. 1919; was eight times mentioned in Despatches; created a K.C.B. in 1918; Grand Officier de l'Ordre de la Couronne; Commander, Legion of Honour, in 1918; Croix de Guerre (French and Belgian). He was made a Knight of Grace of St. John of Jerusalem in 1912. Sir Aylmer Haldane has published "How we escaped from Pretoria." His favourite recreations are shooting and travelling.

The "Daily Sketch," of 26 Feb. 1920, says: "Because it is so full of human touches, Mr. Philip Gibbs's book, 'Realities of War,' published to-day by Heinemann, hard on the heels of his brother's much criticized volume, provides the best account yet written of the fighting on the Western Front."

Mr. Gibbs tells the following story of a General's promise to the children: "General Haldane, when things were at their worst in April, 1918, was surrounded by a group of children who were asking anxiously whether Arras would be taken. He drew a map for them in the dust of the roadway, and showed them where the enemy was attacking and the general strategy. He spoke simply and gravely, as though to a group of Staff officers, and the children followed his diagram in the dust and understood him perfectly. 'They will not take Arras if I can help it,' he said. 'You will be all right here.' They did not take Arras."

Sir Aylmer Haldane wrote at the front in the spring of 1915, "A Brigade of the Old Army, 1914," which was published by Edward Arnold in 1920. It is "Dedicated to the 10th Infantry Brigade, 1st Battn. The Royal Warwickshire Regt., 2nd Battn. The Seaforth Highlanders, 1st Battn. The Royal Irish Fusiliers, 2nd Battn. The Royal Dublin Fusiliers." General Haldane says of his book that it "was intended originally for the officers, non-commissioned officers and men who served under my command during those eventful months" (Aug. to Nov. 1914). "Many of those gallant fellows—indeed, it is to be feared the majority—have fallen in the service of their country." He tells us how, on the 7th Aug. 1914, the 10th Brigade was ordered to York. Some hours were spent hunting for quarters for the troops, which were eventually found "in the grand stand on the Knavesmire Racecourse, in the Exhibition Hall, and in certain store sheds which Mr. Eric Geddes, of the North-Eastern Railway Company, speedily caused to be cleared and placed at my disposal. I was struck by the promptitude with which he appreciated my difficulties, and the speed with which he helped to eliminate them, but at that time I had no idea that he was destined soon to rise to heights of far greater national usefulness."

When the brigade went to France, General Haldane was struck by the remarkably tranquil appearance of the docks at Southampton: "Here were we, a part of the greatest force which had ever been assembled to leave the shores of England in the space of so few days, about to embark on a venture from which few would return alive or uninjured, and yet, but for the season of the year, we might have been sharing in the annual trooping movement to the East."

Arrived in France, the troops "were pestered all day by the inhabitants to hand over as souvenirs their metal cap or shoulder badges. . . . This passion for souvenirs followed us everywhere, and in spite of strict orders against parting with any portion of their uniform, I should say that a large percentage of the population of Northern France, more particularly of the seaports where our troops landed, managed to secure a metal memento of the British soldier. Later on, when we were retreating before the Germans, and passing through a village, I was told that one of the Dublin Fusiliers in my brigade, who was wearily dragging himself along in the ranks of his company, hearing the too-familiar cry of 'Souvenir,' turned an angry glance over his shoulder and growled, 'Here, you can have my blooming pack for a souvenir!'"

He describes the destruction of the footbridge and of the steel bridge over the northern arm of the river at Pont l'Evêque, and says that the bridge over the southern arm of the river was not so easily destroyed. "The bridge had been made unsafe for vehicles, but there was no gap in it when a party of German Lancers came in sight. The engineer officer at the bridge, whose situation was a critical one, hurriedly withdrew his men, and ordered the village to be evacuated. Bullets were now falling thickly, and, crashing through the windows of the houses, caused the horses of the engineer tool-cart to stampede with that vehicle. But the engineer officer, Lieut. Gourlay, had not effected all that was required, and was not to be diverted from his duty; so, snatching up the electrical leads, he fixed them into the exploder and pressed the handle down. The charge exploded instantaneously, blowing a huge gap in the bridge and causing several houses in the village to collapse. Not a moment too soon was the work completed, for dismounted Uhlans were working up the side streets of the village, and the retreat of the demolition party was in imminent danger of being cut off. Indeed, so little time was left that Gourlay and several of his men only escaped capture by springing up behind the troopers of their escort, who speedily galloped off with them to safety, only three men being lost in the whole incident."

Sir Alymer tells us of an imaginative Celt among a particularly fine draft of his old regiment, the Gordon Highlanders. This soldier wrote a postcard to his sweetheart. "In this he stated . . . that on his march up country he had passed thousands of dead Germans, and that it was only with difficulty that he and his comrades could move along the road, so great was the crowd of prisoners who were being conducted to the rear!"

Of the letters from soldiers published in newspapers General Haldane says: "The value of such communications as true representations of occurrences in the field will be apparent if it is remembered that in many cases the further the writer happened to be from the danger zone the more lurid did his descriptions become, for by flights of imagination he was forced to supply deficiencies of fact."

In the chapter "On the Aisne," Sir Aylmer Haldane tells us how "a message came from the Seaforth Highlanders to say that their commanding officer, Lieut.-Colonel Sir Evelyn Bradford, had been killed. I at once went to the battalion, and found that a single shell, which had been fired at the flank of its position, had killed him instantaneously, while he was engaged in examining the ground in front in view of a possible advance. His death was a great loss to the brigade and to myself personally, making the fourth and last of my battalion commanders who had become non-effective since we landed in France, though he alone fell in action."

EDWARDS, FITZJAMES MAINE, Capt., was born 21 May, 1861, son of James Edwards, of Benarth, Conway. He entered the Royal West Surrey Regt. as Lieutenant 22 Oct. 1881, and the Indian Staff Corps 8 Nov. 1883, becoming Captain, Indian Staff Corps, 22 Oct. 1892. He served on the North-West Frontier of India, 1897–98; in Mohmand Expedition, on the Staff. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 11 Jan. 1898, and received the Medal and clasp. He served in the Tirah Campaign, 1897–98, on the Staff, and was present at the actions of Dargai, and of the Sampagha and Arhanga Passes; at the reconnaissance of Saran Sar, and the action of 9 Nov. 1897. Operations in and around Dwatoi, and actions of 24 Nov. 1897. Operations in the Bara Valley 7 to 14 Dec. 1897. He received a clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 20 May, 1898]: "Fitzjames Maine Edwards, Capt., Indian Staff Corps. In recognition of services during the recent operations on the North-West Frontier of India. The Insignia, etc., were presented on 12 Aug. 1898, at Mhow. China, 1900 (Medal). He became Major 10 July, 1901, and Lieutenant-Colonel 22 Oct. 1907; was G.S.O., 1st Grade, India, 3 June, 1911, to 28 Sept. 1913; became Colonel 14 Jan. 1912; was Brigade Commander, India, 20 Sept. 1913, to 13 Dec. 1914. He was Brigade Commander, Meerut Cavalry Brigade, British Expeditionary Force, 14 Dec. 1914, to 26 May, 1916; Brigade Commander, 71st Infantry Brigade, British Armies in France, 27 May, 1916, to 4 Oct. 1916; Brigade Commander, 179th Infantry Brigade, British Armies in France, British Salonika Force, Egyptian Expeditionary Force, from 10 Nov. 1916, to 16 Feb. 1918; appointed A.D.C. to the King 1 Jan. 1917; Brigade Commander, 19th Infantry Brigade, Egyptian Expeditionary Force, 17 Feb. 1918, to 1 March, 1918. He served in the European War from 1915; was present at the capture of Jerusalem; was created a C.M.G. in 1917, and a C.B. in 1918. He married, in 1896, Eva Lilian, only daughter of the late Theodore Henry Stewart, B.C.S.

GOODWIN, THOMAS HERBERT JOHN CHAPMAN, Capt., was born at Kandy, Ceylon, 24 May, 1871, eldest son of Surgeon-Major John Goodwin, Army Medical Staff, and Marion Agnes Power. He was educated at Newton College, Devon, and St. Mary's Hospital, London; joined the Army 29 July, 1893, and became Captain 29 July, 1896. He served on the North-West Frontier of India, 1897–98; was present at the Battle of Shabkadr; was mentioned in Despatches 4 Jan. 1898; received the Medal and clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 20 May, 1898]: "Thomas Herbert John Chapman Goodwin, Surgeon-Captain, Army Medical Staff. In recognition of services in the recent operations on the North-West Frontier of India." (Insignia presented by Major-General Moorsom at Murree 20 Feb. 1898.) He became Major 30 Jan. 1905. Major Goodwin served in the European War from 1914, being present at Mons and the retreat to the Marne, the First and Second Ypres Battles, the fighting on the Somme, etc. Commanded No. 4 Cavalry Field Ambulance, No. 14 General Hospital, and was Assistant Director of Medical Services, 2nd Cavalry Division, British Expeditionary Force, 22 Sept. 1914, to 21 June, 1915; became Lieutenant-Colonel 1 March, 1915; was Assistant Director of Medical Services, Guards Division, British Armies in France, 21 Jan. 1917, to 16 April, 1917. T. H. J. C. Goodwin.

A newspaper correspondent wrote:

"The choice of Colonel Goodwin as the new Acting Director-General of Army Medical Services is appropriate on more than professional grounds. For the entry of the United States into the war has brought this country an increasingly large number of American medical men, who, with great devotion, offered their help at the first call made upon them, and it is fitting that the soldier who, as Assistant Director of Medical Services to the British Mission which went to America under Mr. Balfour and later Lord Northcliffe, was foremost in voicing the call for help, and who, from the beginning of his work in the United States, endeared himself to the whole of a great and very critical medical profession, should become the new Director-General. Colonel Goodwin was one of those who served through the heroic days of Mons, and the Marne and Ypres, and has placed British Medicine deeply in his debt by the manner in which he has fostered and strengthened the bond between our doctors in this country and the American doctors who are coming to work side by side with them. The fruits of his labours are manifest already, for a strong spirit of comradeship has sprung up. An American physician of high standing, who has recently come to this country says of Colonel Goodwin: 'He is a splendid man. We took to him from the first minute. He was so sound in the advice he gave to us, so "live" and so thorough . . . and over all so tactful. It would be a joy to serve under him.' That impression was certainly no isolated one. When the degree of Master of Arts was conferred on Colonel Goodwin by the University of Michigan on 12 Oct. last, the Journal of the American Medical Association commented thus: 'Distinguished scholar and soldier, possessor of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, one of the few survivors of the first British Force in France, gentle in word and in manner, resolute in action.' Colonel Goodwin, therefore, almost more than any living man, will be in a position to understand the respective points of view of the British and American Medical Services, and to encourage the close co-operation between them upon which so much depends. Moreover, his own splendid record of service—North-West Frontier, 1897–1898, Battle of Shabkadr, Despatches, D.S.O., Medal and clasp, three times mentioned in the present war—proves that the welfare of the fighting men will be safe in his hands. He has learnt his war medicine in the field; he knows, above all, the practical necessities of the situation."

He became Lieutenant-General 1 June, 1919, and was created a C.M.G. in 1915; a C.B. in 1918; a K.C.B. in 1919; F.R.C.S., England, in 1919; and is a Knight of Grace of St. John of Jerusalem; Commander, Belgian Order of Leopold; Commander of the Italian Order of the Crown; was awarded the American Distinguished Service Medal. In 1917 he was made Honorary Fellow of the American College of Surgeons, and Master of Arts of the University of Michigan. He is the author of "Notes for Medical Officers on Field Service in India," "Field Service Notes for R.A.M.C.," "Prevention of Disease when on Active Service," "Notes for Army Medical Officers," etc. On 29 Dec. 1897, at Simla, Sir J. Goodwin married Lilian Isabel Ronaldson, youngest daughter of the late James Torrance Ronaldson.

Skipton Hill Climo.

When Brigadier-General Dobbie had to go home on sick leave, Sir Charles Townshend asked that Colonel Climo, of the 24th Punjabis, should be made temporary Brigadier-General in command of his brigade, and this was done. At the Battle of Kurna General Townshend signalled to Colonel Climo his congratulations on the brilliant dash of the Oxfordshire and Buckinghamshire Light Infantry. In his account of the Battle of Ctesiphon Sir C. Townshend speaks of "the 30th Brigade under the gallant Climo," and of "the gallant 30th Brigade under Climo," and tells us how, later on in the conflict, Colonel Climo was carried past him "severely wounded in three places, but quite cheery. This gallant soldier would have been a great loss to me at any time, but at such a critical moment it was a disaster." Sir Charles Townshend complains in his book that the 6th Division was neglected in the way of rewards and promotions: "None of my lieutenant-colonels had been promoted to higher commands, except Colonel Climo, whom I had strongly recommended twice for promotion, giving him temporary command of a brigade in the actions of Kurna, Kut-al-Amara and Ctesiphon, in which last battle he had been severely wounded."

BRINDLE, ROBERT, The Rev., was born in Liverpool 4 Nov. 1837. He studied for twelve years at the English College at Lisbon; was ordained Deacon, and became Priest in 1862. He worked on the Missions at Plymouth for some twelve years, and became Military Chaplain in 1874, his first experience being at Woolwich. Thence he passed to Halifax, Nova Scotia, for five years, and on his return served for a short time at Aldershot. In 1882 came the campaign against Arabi Pasha, and for four years he saw constant active service in Egypt. Of the landing of the troops the Bishop was wont to give a very lively description. The scene of hopeless confusion in the unloading of the transports at Ishmailia, the horses swimming from the ships on to the shore, the men encumbered with all manner of military stores and equipments, he would relate in an amusing manner—adding the remark of one of the British Tars who said that he had hitherto considered himself as one of Her Majesty's seamen, but had now been turned into a commissariat mule! He was continually with the fighting line. He was present at a great many battles, in which he shared the risks of the combatants. Speaking to the students at Lisbon College in 1909, His Lordship frankly admitted that in the first engagement with the enemy, when the English lost about a hundred men, he felt anything but comfortable, and called himself a fool for having left congenial work in England to go out to a desert place where he thought he would certainly be shot. Such, however, was not to be, and in future, when under fire, he experienced no such fear, although he had some narrow escapes. He was not present at the Battle of Tel-el-Kebir, being stricken down with cholera just previously. While he was in Cairo he worked among the numerous cases of enteric fever. One who was with him says that he cheered all by his companionship, and was never downhearted. He was always in the best of spirits, and was always most popular with the soldiers. In the Nile Expedition of 1884, he captained one of the boats of the Royal Irish Regt.—the regiment which won the prize of £10 offered by Lord Wolseley to the first boat to reach the end of the river journey. Field-Marshal Sir Evelyn Wood says: "I was riding up the banks of the Nile on a camel, and he was pulling in a boat of the Royal Irish Regt. About sundown on Christmas Day I saw a little flotilla of boats flying the Royal Irish flag toiling up the river. Father Brindle got out when he had pulled up to us, hot, tired and irritable, with his hands blistered and the perspiration running down his face. Said I: 'Father, what have you been doing?' 'Pulling stroke in order to encourage them.' 'Any result?' I asked. What he really said was 'Devil a bit.' But I interpreted it to the clerics, 'No, none at all.' The Father was, however, unduly pessimistic, for the Royal Irish won Lord Wolseley's prize, given to the battalion which made the best time for the three or four hundred miles up the river, and also which brought up in good order the largest amount of public stores intact." This incident occurred on Christmas Day, 1884, during the Gordon Relief Expedition, and is related by Field-Marshal Sir E. Wood, V.C., in "Winnowed Memories." A Protestant friend of Dr. Brindle's, a doctor attached to the Expedition, relates how, after the Battle of Metemmeh, "the Royal Irish were ordered across the desert to assist in the return of the force. Lord Wolseley was aware that to send the regiment without Father Brindle was out of the question, and so he accompanied the regiment, and was provided with a camel for the hundreds of miles of the march. But Father Brindle did not use the camel, and did the whole desert journey to Metemmeh and back on foot. I went out a few miles, from Korti, to meet the returning force, and found the Father marching with the regiment, but the soles of his boots were gone, and rags rolled about his feet had replaced them. According to my experience, everyone that met him appreciated him. He was a wonderful man for making friends, and Lord Wolseley had a very high opinion of him." After being present at the Battle of Ginniss, he returned to England, and for the next ten years served as Chaplain at Colchester and Aldershot. During this period of his life, says his friend, the Very Rev. Canon Vere, "I saw him from time to time, and was his guest at Aldershot. In the thirty-fifth year of his priesthood, and nearing the fifty-ninth year of his age, Father Brindle again set sail for Egypt, and, in 1896, was attached to Lord Kitchener's Expedition to Dongola. During the long and trying period of inaction at Sarras, the soldier-Chaplain distinguished himself by his devotion to the sick. He was, when cholera invaded the camp, tireless in his ministration to the troops, who were always cheered by his undaunted spirit." Mr. R. Caton Woodville, in his "Random Recollections," speaks of Father Brindle thus: "All the Tommies loved him when he was Army Chaplain. It was he who carried the Tommies out of their quarters in his arms, placed them in the ambulance to convey them to the hospital when nobody else would come near them, as the cholera was raging and the men were dying like flies, and even many of the doctors themselves had died. When I asked him how it was that he never caught it himself, he replied that he never ate anything that was not freshly cooked. It was during the halt at Atbara that Father Brindle performed a very heroic deed. It was a Saturday night, and word came from another camp some nine miles away that a Catholic soldier was dying. Unarmed, he set out at once, and walked across the El Teb, which was infested by the enemy. He administered the last rites to the dying man, and stayed with him to the end. He then tramped back without rest or food, and reached the camp in time to say Mass for his men on Sunday morning." On Good Friday, the 8th of April, Father Brindle was present at the Battle of the Atbara, which wiped out the finest Dervish Army that had opposed the British. In the three great attacks of the Battle of Omdurman, the heroic priest was in the fighting line. At the Memorial Service for General Gordon, held in Khartoum, Father Brindle was one of the officiating Chaplains, and composed a prayer which he recited on that occasion, and which by Lord Kitchener's orders was printed for distribution. G. W. Steevens says, on page 314 of his book "With Kitchener to Khartoum": "Next fell a deeper hush than ever, except for the solemn minute guns that had followed the fierce salute. Four Chaplains—Catholic, Anglican, Presbyterian and Methodist—came slowly forward and ranged themselves with their backs to the palace, just before the Sirdar. The Presbyterian read the fifteenth Psalm, the Anglican led the rustling whisper of the Lord's Prayer. Snow-haired Father Brindle, best beloved of Priests, laid his helmet at his feet and read a memorial prayer bareheaded in the sun." Father Brindle was five times mentioned in Despatches, and received rapid promotion. For the Nile Expedition of 1884, he received the British War Medal with four clasps, and for the Khartoum Expedition the Medal with three clasps. He was given a Good Service Pension, and received the Turkish Orders of the Medjidie with three clasps, the Osmanieh with four clasps, and the Khedive's Bronze Star. He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 15 Nov. 1898]: "Rev. Robert Brindle, Chaplain to the Forces, 1st Class, in recognition of services in Egypt and the Sudan, including the battles of Atbara and Khartoum." The Insignia were sent to the General O.C. in Egypt, and presented by him 20 Dec. 1898, at a full dress parade at the Cairo Garrison. Father Brindle had his decoration stolen from him in Rome, and obtained another at his own expense, and this was presented to him by Queen Victoria on 11 May, 1899. He retired from the Army in 1899; journeyed from Egypt to Rome, and on 12 March, 1899, was consecrated Titular Bishop of Hermopolis by Cardinal Satolli. After the death of Monsignor Barry, Bishop Brindle became Provost of the Westminster Chapter, and for nearly three years he worked as Auxiliary in the Archdiocese. On Thursday, 20 Sept. 1900, he consecrated St. Patrick's Church in Soho Square. Most of the information given in this account of the Bishop is supplied by his friend, the Very Rev. Canon Vere, of St. Patrick's Presbytery. In the 65th year of his age Bishop Brindle was translated to the See of Nottingham, 6 Dec. 1901. In the Advent of 1911 the soldier Bishop uttered these solemn words of warning: "There is a strange feeling of unrest everywhere; vast armies stand ready for the bugle-call as though an enemy were at their gates; huge navies armed with the most powerful engines of destruction the world has ever known keep watch and ward upon the seas; while mistrust of each other sits like a ghost at every council board; and this is reacting in the daily life of the people; we are growing less and less inclined to fulfil our duties for duty's sake; pleasure takes the place of duty wherever it can be obtained; regard for law has no influence for its own sake, if only we can escape detection, and the obligations of our state of life are seldom sweetened by the thought of 'something attempted, something done.'" Bishop Brindle resigned the See of Nottingham, and died on 26 June, 1916, at Mount St. Mary's College, near Sheffield, where he had been on a visit since March. He was given a soldier's funeral at Nottingham Cathedral on Wednesday, 5 July, 1916. Lord Kitchener's death had just taken place. A letter from Lord Kitchener to Bishop Brindle is given below:

"Honiton, 2 October.

"My dear Father,

"I like this form of address better than your exalted title of Bishop. I wonder you did not excommunicate the War Office and all its contents, including the Staff that now rule there; perhaps you had not a bell, book and candle with you, and only murmured the formula. As an Irishman I much wish I could come and see your Irish friends, but it is a far cry to Liverpool. Next time I stay at Knowsley, which I do sometimes, I will see what can be done. I often look back in memory to the old Soudan days when you used to lead the troops across the desert, and wish those days back again. I am shortly going back to Khartoum for the winter, and to shoot up the White Nile. I was delighted to get your letter, and to feel that you still have a kindly remembrance for your old friend,

"Kitchener."

Bishop Brindle's photograph stood on the mantelpiece of Lord Wolseley's office in London. A stranger happened to notice the portrait, and asked the Field-Marshal who it was. He replied: "That is one of the finest soldiers in the British Army, Father Brindle."

TOWNSHEND, CHARLES VERE FERRERS, Capt. and Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel, was born 21 Feb. 1861. He is a cousin of the 6th Marquess Townshend. He became Lieutenant, Royal Marines, 1 Feb. 1881, and served in the Sudan Expedition of 1884–85. Suakin and the Nile. Operations round Suakin in 1884 (mentioned in Despatches). Nile Expedition. With the Royal Marines, attached to Guards' Camel Regt. Actions at Abu Klea and El Gubat, and reconnaissance on Metemmeh (Medal with two clasps; Bronze Star). He was transferred to the Indian Staff Corps 15 Jan. 1886. In 1891–92 he served in the Hunza Nagar Expedition. Taking of Nilt (Despatches [London Gazette, 21 June, 1892]; Medal with clasp). He was promoted to Captain 1 Feb. 1892. In 1895 he served in the Chitral Expedition, and commanded the Garrison of Chitral during the siege of the fort. He was thanked by the Government of India; mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 16 July, 1895]; received the Medal and clasp; was created a C.B., and was given the Brevet of Major 10 July, 1895. He was employed with the Egyptian Army 11 Feb. 1896, to 1 Dec. 1898, and in 1896 served in the Expedition to Dongola, taking part in the operations of 7 June and 19 Sept. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 3 Nov. 1896]; received the Egyptian Medal with two clasps, and was given the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 18 Nov. 1896. He served in the Nile Expedition of 1898, and was present at the battles of the Atbara and Khartoum; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 24 May and 30 Sept. 1898]; received the Medal, and two clasps to the Egyptian Medal, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 15 Nov. 1898]: "Charles Vere Ferrers Townshend, Capt. and Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel, Indian Staff Corps. In recognition of services during the recent operations in the Sudan." The Insignia were presented to him by the Queen at Windsor 1 Dec. 1898. He served in the South African War, 1899–1900, as Special Service Officer, and afterwards on the Staff of the Military Governor of Bloemfontein. He was present at the operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900. Operations in Orange River Colony, May to Sept. 1900. Operations in Cape Colony in 1900 (Queen's Medal with two clasps). He was given the Brevet of Colonel 10 Feb. 1904; became Major, Royal Fusiliers, 28 July, 1900; Acting Military Attaché, Paris, in 1903, and Major, Shropshire Light Infantry, 7 March, 1906; became Colonel 2 Aug. 1907; Assistant Adjutant-General, 9th Division, Army in India, 2 Aug. 1907, to 8 April, 1909; Officer Commanding District, South Africa, 9 April, 1909, to 20 Sept. 1911; promoted to Major-General 18 June, 1911; G.O.C., Home Counties Division, Eastern Command, 1 April, 1912, to 5 June, 1913; Brigade Commander, India, 30 June, 1913, to 17 April, 1915. He commanded the 6th Division, Indian Expeditionary Force "D", 18 April, 1915; was created a K.C.B.; was besieged in Kut, and eventually taken prisoner by the Turks, and released after the Armistice.

C. V. F. Townshend.

A very interesting book was written by Major E. W. C. Sandes, M.C., R.E., called "In Kut and Captivity." The story "mainly follows the fortunes of the 6th Indian Division and its attached troops in prosperity and adversity, in victory and disaster, during their struggle against the Ottoman troops in Mesopotamia, and it describes the adventures of a small portion of the garrison of Kut when in captivity in Turkey." Major Sandes says, in Chapter XI.: "Why did the 6th Indian Division and the 30th Brigade halt at Kut-el-Amarah in the retreat from Ctesiphon instead of continuing their retirement towards Amarah? This is a question which has been asked many times and around which much heated discussion has raged; for the fate of the unfortunate force under the command of General Townshend was due to the fact that it remained in Kut, when it was overtaken and surrounded by the Turks, and lacked sufficient food supplies to enable it to hold out till relieved by an army which was hampered and delayed by atrocious weather conditions. As in the case of the vexed question of the advance on Baghdad in 1915, I will leave the reader to draw his own conclusions and make his own criticisms; yet some aspects of the problem which confronted General Townshend on his arrival at Kut-el-Amarah present an interesting study. Before enumerating the pros and cons of the question, let me quote an extract from General Townshend's communiqué to his troops in Kut, dated 26 Jan. 1916. . . . The communiqué runs as follows: 'I desire all ranks to know why I decided to make a stand at Kut during the retirement from Ctesiphon. It was because as long as we hold Kut, the Turks cannot get their ships, barges, stores and munitions past this, and so cannot move down to attack Amarah; and thus we are holding up the whole of the Turkish advance. It also gives time for our reinforcements to come up from Busrah, and so restore success to our arms. It gives time to our allies the Russians, who are now overrunning Persia, to move towards Baghdad. . . . By standing at Kut I maintain the territory won in the past year—and thus we maintain the campaign as a glorious one instead of letting disaster pursue its course to Amarah and perhaps beyond.' This statement enumerates most of the points in favour of the halt of our retiring force at Kut, but I may perhaps add one or two others for the consideration of my readers. Our troops had come through some very strenuous fighting, consequently were much fatigued and in need of rest in order to recuperate and refit. In addition, the strategical importance of Kut with regard to the Shatt-al-Hai Channel to Nasariyeh should not be overlooked. The evacuation of Kut would have left the Shatt-al-Hai Channel—which would shortly be filled with flood water—open to the boat traffic of the enemy down to Nasariyeh, thus enabling the Turk to mass troops and stores with ease for a flank attack on Amarah, or for an attack on Nasariyeh itself, and also to make use of the great supplies of grain available in the area around the Shatt-al-Hai Channel. Again, with the shipping available, it would not have been possible to remove from Kut all the stores and ammunition accumulated at that place, and enormous quantities of both would consequently have had to be destroyed to prevent them falling into the hands of the enemy. A further consideration was the fact that the town of Kut was known to contain a very great quantity of provisions of all sorts, seemingly ample for a force of 13,000 men besieged for what would probably be a short period. Lastly, the unfortunate loss of prestige caused by our unavoidable retirement from Ctesiphon would be partially redeemed if our force remained in Kut and retired no farther. Recapitulating the advantages gained by a halt at Kut, we find the following: (a) It held up the river transport of any large Turkish force advancing on Amarah by the Tigris. (b) It gave time for our reinforcements to arrive from Busrah and beyond, and to concentrate for action. (c) It assisted the Russian move on Baghdad from Persia by diverting many of the enemy's troops to Kut. (d) It enabled our fatigued troops to rest and refit. (e) It closed the Shatt-al-Hai Channel to the river-transport of the enemy. (f) It obviated the necessity of destroying a great quantity of valuable stores. (g) It took advantage of the mass of provisions available in Kut which would otherwise have been lost. (h) It saved a further and more serious loss of prestige, such as would have been entailed by a continued retreat downstream. Any reasonable person will admit that some or all of these considerations would carry weight when placed before a commander in the field; yet, as there are two sides to every question, it will be well to examine the case for the opposition. The main objection to holding Kut lay in the fact that by remaining in Kut, the 6th Division, which had outdistanced the Turkish pursuit from Ctesiphon, allowed the enemy to regain touch with it before it had reached reinforcements sufficient to defeat that enemy. Another objection to the holding of Kut was that, in nine cases out of ten, the correct place for a fighting force is in the open field, where its liberty of action will not be restricted and it can still retain the initiative. In most cases a force besieged is a force wasted, for it deliberately adopts the defensive attitude, which tends to develop into a passive defence late in a siege; and a passive defence is liable to cause loss of moral among the besieged. Again, the approaching flood season of the River Tigris was a matter of the gravest importance. At high flood the river can be made to swamp most of the country below Kut, and this was likely to render the advance of a relieving force, faced by determined opposition, a matter of extreme difficulty, probably involving great loss of life. Lastly, if the 6th Division had retired towards Amarah and joined hands with the force collecting there under General Aylmer, the concentration thus effected would have created a large field force, unhampered by any necessity for an urgent advance under unfavourable conditions; and all our troops would have been comparatively close to their depôts of supplies and ammunition, and the enemy more distant from his own. Summing up the case against the holding of Kut, the leading points are as follows: (a) It caused the halt of a retreating force, which had succeeded in eluding pursuit, but had not been adequately reinforced. (b) It imprisoned in a restricted and unfavourably situated area a force designed for fighting in the field. (c) It incurred the danger of the capture of that force, owing to the difficulty of a relief force reaching Kut across flooded country. (d) It entailed strategical dispersion of force by having a portion of our army in Kut and the remainder near Amarah. The decision to halt in Kut was not reached hastily, nor without very lengthy discussion of the problem from every point of view. Of this we may be sure. No one unacquainted with the whole of the information at the disposal of our generals is qualified to give an opinion on the subject, or to criticize the decision reached about 8 Dec. 1915—viz., that the 6th Division and the 30th Brigade should remain in Kut, and keep the Union Jack flying far up the Tigris till relief arrived from below. That this decision should have led to the disastrous termination of the siege of Kut was the result of a combination of misfortunes and delays which none foresaw in Dec. 1915." The book is certainly very well worth reading. It tells us the story of the hopes and fears and sufferings of the garrison throughout the siege; and after the fall of Kut we are enabled in some degree to realize the gross ill-treatment meted out to many of their prisoners by the Turks, which in somes cases did not stop short of actual and very deliberate murder. The "Morning Post" of 14 Jan. 1920, publishes a letter from a correspondent, from which we give an extract: "The announcement that Major-General Sir Charles Townshend has tendered his resignation is a serious blow to the prospects of the future British Army. Those who, like the present writer, had had the advantage of talking over the military position with Sir Charles Townshend before the Great War must have felt what a cruel chance of Fate it was that sent this brilliant officer to be sacrificed to other people's stupidity in Mesopotamia. For he was a man who saw, with an insight that was so clear as to be super-intellectual, not only that the Germans had prepared for a war in 1914 or thereabouts, but also the main lines of their plan of campaign. The Western Front had been a subject for his close study long before 1914; and if it had been his lot to serve there, without a shadow of doubt his value to the Allies' cause would have been of vital significance. But it was ruled otherwise. The field assigned to him was Mesopotamia. There the strategical judgment of a leader who was of the intellectual school of Marshal Foch was nullified by higher authority; he was driven to a task which he knew to be impossible, and his services to the country as a soldier were lost with the fall of Kut, though as a captive in Constantinople he was able at a later stage to do brilliant diplomatic service to the Empire. Not that the first Mesopotamian campaign, which ended with the fall of Kut, was without glory. General Townshend had estimated with exactness what forces he would require to take Baghdad; he was given about one-third of the necessary forces. Even so, he conducted a vigorous campaign until the Turkish Empire, finding its great Asian capital threatened, rallied its forces, obtained help from the Germans, and massed an overwhelming army against the British forlorn hope. General Townshend, after his great victories against heavy odds at Kut, at Karna, and at Ctesiphon, was forced, on the arrival of a new Turkish Army Corps, to fall back on Kut and stand a siege there. He was left without relief until forced by starvation to surrender. It is not difficult to understand that the authorities who put this General into an impossible position would be inclined to withhold from him the recognition to give which would involve grave censure on their own competency. But it is to the last degree regrettable that the services of this splendid soldier should be lost to the country for this reason."

We give some extracts from Sir Charles Townshend's book, "My Campaign in Mesopotamia":

"The exploits of my soldiers were great in themselves and great in their consequences, for we conquered over three hundred miles of territory by our three victories, all of which were battles of manœuvre. The victories of Kut-al-Amara and Ctesiphon—second to none in the glorious records of the Indian Army—are signal examples of heroic conduct and devoted zeal on the part of the troops I commanded."

General Townshend remarks in the Preface on the inadequacy of the means placed at his disposal for the campaign:

"Such a task with a handful of troops was one at which Bonaparte or Hannibal might have despaired. And its magnitude will be the better appreciated when it is considered that General Maude, to effect the same task, was given 113,000 to 120,000 troops, as against my 13,000, with a full proportion of guns, supplies, steamers, railways, etc."

"The resolution I took—to stand at Kut—saved us from being simply kicked out of Mesopotamia. All Mesopotamia would have risen behind us had I continued my retreat past this point, which is at the bifurcation of the Tigris and Hai Rivers, whence Feld-Marschall Von der Goltz, then commanding the 6th Turkish Army, could have directed a strategic turning movement viâ the Hai to Nasiriyeh, which was only some three or four days' march from Basra. To stand at Kut was the only way to enable Government to bring reinforcements from overseas and to repair the disaster. But I bargained to be relieved in two months; or else, as I wired to Sir John Nixon, it would be impossible to relieve us."

These extracts are from the Preface, and when the book is drawing to a close General Townshend writes:

"It seems to me that I cannot better end the story of the defence of Kut than by quoting the speech of Lord Kitchener, then Minister for War, in the House of Lords, on May 4th, 1916—perhaps the last occasion that he spoke in public. He quoted my last message before hoisting the white flag over Kut and burning the tattered Union Jack, which we had kept flying for just on five months, with my own hands, so that it might not fall into those of the enemy:

"'Lord Beresford asked the Secretary of State for War how many British prisoners were taken at the surrender of Kut, and whether it was a fact that the Turkish Commander-in-Chief was so impressed by the heroic defence made by General Townshend that he granted him the full honours of war by allowing him to retain his sword.'

"'Earl Kitchener: I am glad that the noble and gallant lord has offered me this opportunity of paying a tribute to General Townshend and his troops, whose dogged determination and splendid courage have earned for them so honourable a record. It is well known how, after a series of brilliantly-fought engagements, General Townshend decided to hold the strategically important position at Kut-al-Amara, and it will not be forgotten that his dispositions for the defence of the place were so excellent and so complete that the enemy, notwithstanding large numerical superiority, was wholly unable to penetrate his lines. Noble lords will not fail to realize how tense was the strain borne by those troops who, for more than twenty weeks, held to their posts under conditions of abnormal climatic difficulty, and on rations calculated for protraction to the furthest possible period, until, as it was proved, imminent starvation itself compelled the capitulation of this gallant garrison, which consisted of 2,970 British and some 6,000 Indian troops, including followers. General Townshend and his troops, in their honourable captivity, will have the satisfaction of knowing that, in the opinion of their comrades, which I think I may say that the country and this House fully share, they did all that was humanly possible to resist to the last, and that their surrender reflects no discredit on themselves or on the record of the British and Indian Armies. Every effort was, of course, made to relieve the beleaguered force, and I am not travelling beyond the actual facts in saying that to the adverse elements alone was due the denial of success; the constant rain and consequent floods not only impeding the advance, but compelling—in lieu of turning movements—direct attacks on an almost impossibly narrow front. No praise would seem extravagant for the troops under Sir Percy Lake and Sir George Gorringe, and that they did not reap the fruit of their courage and devotion is solely due to the circumstances which fought against them. The last message sent by General Townshend from Kut was addressed in these terms: "We are pleased to know that we have done our duty, and recognize that our situation is one of the fortunes of war. We thank you and General Gorringe and all ranks of the Tigris force for the great efforts you have made to save us." I think the House, no less than the country at large, will endorse these words, and I am sure that those who held and those who strained every nerve to relieve Kut have alike earned our admiration and our gratitude. I am glad to endorse what the noble lord has said in regard to the conduct of the Turkish Commander.'

"'Lord Grenfell said the eulogy of General Townshend which had been pronounced would be very satisfactory to the House and to the Army, including the force which remained in Mesopotamia. In spite of the difficulties of various kinds, sickness, want of food, and lack of medical stores, General Townshend and the Anglo-Indian force held Kut in the most admirable manner until, the food supplies being exhausted, to save the lives of his men, General Townshend consented to capitulate. The defence of Kut by General Townshend and the determination of his troops would long be remembered with great admiration by the Army and the country.'" (From the "Times," 5 May, 1916.)

In this most interesting book General Townshend claims to have shortened the war by some months by his negotiations which brought about the premature surrender of Turkey. He pleads that the Turkish Empire in Europe should not be dismembered, and says that the best of the Turks have, and always have had, friendly sentiments towards Great Britain.

HUGHES, GEORGE ARTHUR, Lieut.-Colonel, was born 18 May, 1851, fifth son of the late James Hughes, of Curragh Priven, Rathcormac, County Cork. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin (Bachelor of Arts; Bachelor of Medicine; Master of Surgery), and joined the R.A.M.C. 4 Feb. 1877; served in the Afghan War, 1878–80 (Medal); in the Bechuanaland Expedition, 1884–85, and in the Ashanti Expedition, 1895–96 (Honourably mentioned; Star). He served in the Nile Expedition in 1898, and was present at the Battle of Khartoum; received the Egyptian Medal with clasp; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 30 Sept. 1898], and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 15 Nov. 1898]: "George Arthur Hughes, Lieut.-Colonel, Royal Army Medical Corps. In recognition of services during the recent operations in the Sudan." (The Insignia, etc., were sent to the G.O.C., Malta, 21 Dec. 1898, and presented by General Sir L. Fremantle 15 Feb. 1898.) He became Colonel 25 March, 1904, and retired 26 Aug. 1905.

BLOMFIELD, CHARLES JAMES, Colonel, was born at Bow, Devonshire, 26 May, 1855, second son of the Rev. George J. Blomfield, Rector of Aldington, Kent, and Isabel, daughter of the late Right Rev. Charles James Blomfield, Lord Bishop of London. He was educated at Haileybury, and the Royal Military College, Sandhurst; entered the Army as Sub-Lieutenant (unattached) 11 Feb. 1875; 20th Foot 11 Feb. 1875; for 1st Class at Royal Military College, became Lieutenant, 20th Foot, 11 Feb. 1875; was Adjutant, Lancashire Fusiliers, 27 Aug. 1880, to 20 Nov. 1883; Captain, Lancashire Fusiliers, 1 July, 1881. He married, 18 Aug. 1881, in Dublin, Henriette Elizabeth Briscoe, daughter of Major E. Briscoe (The Lancashire Fusiliers), and their sons are: Myles Aldington Blomfield, Commander, Royal Navy (born in 1885), and Patrick Valentine Blomfield, Lieutenant, 2nd Lancers, Indian Army (born 1893). He was Adjutant, Auxiliary Forces, 18 Jan. 1884, to 17 Jan. 1889; became Major 31 July, 1890; was Acting Military Secretary to His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, Bombay Army, in 1891; D.A.A.G., Bombay, 27 Oct. 1892, to 9 Jan. 1897; A.A.G., India, 10 Jan. 1897, to 31 Dec. 1897. He became Lieutenant-Colonel 15 Oct. 1898; served in the Sudan Expedition in 1898; was present at the Battle of Khartoum; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 30 Sept. 1898]; received the Egyptian Medal with clasp, and the Queen's Medal, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 15 Nov. 1898]: "Charles James Blomfield, Colonel, The Lancashire Fusiliers. In recognition of services during the recent operations in the Sudan." The Insignia, Warrant and Statutes were sent to the G.O.C., Gibraltar and presented by him 15 Dec. 1898. He was in command of the 2nd Lancashire Fusiliers from Dec. 1899, to 27 Oct. 1900; commanded 2nd Lancashire Fusiliers in the South African War, 1899–1902; was with the Ladysmith Relief Force in the operations of 17 to 24 Jan. 1900, and was severely wounded at Spion Kop.

Charles J. Blomfield.

Sir A. Conan Doyle says, on pages 196 and 197 of "The Great Boer War": "By the morning of Jan. 22 the regiments were clustering thickly all round the edges of the Boer main position, and the day was spent in resting the weary men and in determining at what point the final assault should be delivered. On the right front, commanding the Boer lines on either side, towered the stark eminence of Spion Kop, so called because from its summit the Boer voortrekkers had first in 1835 gazed down upon the promised land of Natal. If that could only be seized and held! Buller and Warren swept its bald summit with their field-glasses. It was a venture. But all war is a venture; and the brave man is he who ventures most. One fiery rush and the master-key of all these locked doors might be in our keeping. That evening there came a telegram to London which left the whole empire in a hush of anticipation. Spion Kop was to be attacked that night. The troops which were selected for the task were eight companies of the 2nd Lancashire Fusiliers, six of the 2nd Royal Lancasters, two of the 1st South Lancashires, 180 of Thorneycroft's, and half a company of Sappers. It was to be a North of England job. Under the friendly cover of a starless night the men, in Indian file, like a party of Iroquois braves upon the war-trail, stole up the winding and ill-defined path which led to the summit. Woodgate, the Lancashire brigadier, and Blomfield of the Fusiliers, led the way. It was a severe climb of 2,000 feet, coming after arduous work over broken ground, but the affair was well timed, and it was at that blackest hour which precedes the dawn that the last steep ascent was reached. The Fusiliers crouched down among the rocks to recover their breath, and saw far down in the plain beneath them the placid lights which showed where their comrades were resting. A fine rain was falling, and rolling clouds hung low over their heads. The men with unloaded rifles and fixed bayonets stole on once more, their bodies bent, their eyes peering through the mirk for the first sign of the enemy—that enemy whose first sign has usually been a shattering volley. Thorneycroft's men with their gallant leader had threaded their way up into the advance. Then the leading files found that they were walking on the level. The crest had been gained. With slow steps and bated breath the open line of skirmishers stole across it. Was it possible that it had been entirely abandoned? Suddenly a raucous shout of 'Wie da?' came out of the darkness, then a shot, then a splutter of musketry and a yell, as the Fusiliers sprang onwards with their bayonets. The Boer post of Vryheid burghers clattered and scrambled away into the darkness, and a cheer that roused both the sleeping armies told that the surprise had been complete and the position won. In the grey light of the breaking day the men advanced along the narrow, undulating ridge, the prominent end of which they had captured. Another trench faced them, but it was weakly held and abandoned. Then the men, uncertain what remained beyond, halted and waited for full light to see where they were, and what the work was which lay before them—a fatal halt, as the result proved, and yet one so natural that it is hard to blame the officer who ordered it. Indeed, he might have seemed more culpable had he pushed blindly on, and so lost the advantage which had been already gained."

Sir A. Conan Doyle goes on to describe the action at Spion Kop, and says that "the losses in the action were very heavy, not fewer than fifteen hundred being killed, wounded or missing, the proportion of killed, being, on account of the shell fire, abnormally high. The Lancashire Fusiliers were the heaviest sufferers, and their Colonel, Blomfield, was wounded, and fell into the hands of the enemy."

Colonel Blomfield took part in the operations in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, 30 Nov. 1900, to 31 May, 1902 (was Colonel on the Staff to command District in 1900, and in command of columns); operations on the Zululand Frontier of Natal in Sept. 1901; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 8 Feb. 1901, and 29 July, 1902], and received the Brevet of Colonel 29 Nov. 1900, the Queen's Medal with four clasps, and the King's Medal with two clasps. He became Colonel 24 June, 1902; was Colonel on the Staff, commanding Harrismith and Natal Sub-District, South Africa, from 24 June, 1902, to 29 June, 1906; was created a C.B. in 1906; became Major-General 12 Feb. 1907; was G.O.C., Wessex Division, Southern Command, from 1 Jan. 1909, to 9 Feb. 1911; commanded Mhow Division, India, from 3 March, 1911, to Nov. 1912; commanded the Peshawar Division from 1913 to 25 June, 1915, and a Division, Territorial Force, from Nov. 1915, to July, 1917. Major-General C. J. Bomfield, C.B., D.S.O., was placed on the retired list on account of having attained the age limit 18 July, 1917.

LLOYD, FRANCIS, Lieut.-Colonel, was born 12 Aug. 1853, son of Colonel R. T. Lloyd and the Lady Frances, daughter of Thomas Robert, 10th Earl of Kinnoull. He was educated at Harrow, and was gazetted to the 32nd Duke of Wellington's Regt. 18 March, 1874; was transferred to the Grenadier Guards 29 Aug. 1874; became Lieutenant 18 March, 1875, and Captain 1 April, 1885. Capt. Lloyd served in the Sudan Expedition in 1885 (Suakin), and was employed as Signalling Officer, Guards Brigade; was present at the Battle of Hasheen; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 25 Aug. 1885]; received the Medal with clasp, and the Bronze Star. He was Regimental Adjutant, Grenadier Guards, 7 May, 1889, to 6 May, 1893; was promoted to Major 10 Aug. 1892. He was Commandant, School of Instruction for Militia and Volunteers, London, 1 Jan. 1894, to 24 Aug. 1896, and commanded the Guards' Depôt 25 Aug. 1896, to 18 May, 1897; was promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel 23 Oct. 1898. He served in the Nile Expedition of 1898, and was present at the Battle of Khartoum; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 30 Sept. 1898]; received the Egyptian Medal with clasp; the Medal, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 15 Nov. 1898]: "Francis Lloyd, Lieut.-Colonel, Grenadier Guards. In recognition of services during the recent operations in the Sudan." Lieut.-Colonel Francis Lloyd served in the South African War from 1900–2, in command of the 2nd Battn. Grenadier Guards. He took part in operations in the Orange Free State, April to May, 1900; operations in Orange River Colony, May to 29 Nov. 1900, including operations at Biddulphsberg (severely wounded). Sir A. Conan Doyle says, in "The Great Boer War" (page 341): "The Boers were in full retreat, but now, as always, they were dangerous. One cannot take them for granted, for the very moment of defeat is that at which they are capable of some surprising effort. Rundle, following them up from Senekal, found them in strong possession of the kopjes at Biddulphsberg, and received a check in his endeavour to drive them off. It was an action fought amid great grass fires, where the possible fate of the wounded was horrible to contemplate. The 2nd Grenadiers, the Scots Guards, the East Yorkshires and the West Kents were all engaged, with the 2nd and 79th Field Batteries and a force of Yeomanry. Our losses incurred in the open from unseen rifles were thirty killed and 130 wounded, including Colonel Lloyd of the Grenadiers." Operations in the Transvaal, Feb. to March, 1901; operations in Orange River Colony, Dec. 1900, to Feb. 1901, and March, 1901, to 31 May, 1902. He proceeded with the 1st Guards Brigade to France 12 Aug. 1914, and was promoted to Major-General 18 Aug. 1914; was present at the Retreat from Mons to Paris, and in the Battles of the Marne and the Aisne. In Oct. 1914, he was appointed to the command of the 18th Division at Colchester, and was on active service with this Division in 1915 and 1916, being present in the Battles of the Somme and the Ancre (Despatches five times). On 15 Jan. 1917, he assumed command of the 18th Army Corps, and in June, 1918, became Inspector-General of Training, British Armies in France. He was promoted to Lieutenant-General 1 Jan. 1919, and created a K.C.B. in 1917. Sir Ivor Maxse has the Grand Cross of the Crown of Belgium; is Commander of the Legion of Honour; has the Military Medal (France) and the Military Medal (Belgium). He published a book called "Seymour Vandeleur," in 1906. General Maxse married, in 1899, the Hon. Mary Caroline Wyndham, eldest daughter of the 2nd Baron Leconfield, and they have two sons and one daughter.

Frederick Ivor Maxse.

One of the most interesting chapters in "Seymour Vandeleur" describes "Omdurman, Sept. 1898," and we give an extract from the part of it which describes the second phase of the battle. "It had," says General Maxse, "lasted over four hours without many pauses, and was being more hotly contested than ever, when MacDonald was suddenly called upon to face another crisis. This time it menaced his right rear from the direction of the Kerreri hills. The Green Flags of Ali Wad Helu and Sheik-el-Din—the latter only just returned from his exhausting and abortive pursuit of Broadwood—were descending upon the rear of the 9th Sudanese whilst the battalion still confronted the Black Flags. It was a question of minutes and drill, and the minutes were at the disposal of one man—MacDonald. If he misused them his brigade would be swept away, Lewis's would follow a few minutes later, Collinson's too must be wiped out—together with hospitals, transport and reserve ammunition. Wauchope was moving to the scene of action at the double, but could scarcely have saved the situation if MacDonald's brigade had been overwhelmed. Thus Mahdism's last and only remaining chance depended on MacDonald's making a mistake, and he made none. He saw what was coming, knew exactly what to do, and did it. It was a matter of drill under high pressure, and he had been drilling his brigade under all circumstances during several years. He had risen from private soldier to the command of a brigade, and was now to justify his promotion. With calm precision he issued his orders, and in a few minutes all his battalions, batteries and Maxims were extricating themselves from their engagement with the Black Flags and threading their way at the double by the shortest route into a new alignment facing the Green Flags. The change of front had barely been executed when the Baggara Horse came charging home, followed by solid masses of riflemen and spearmen, just as the Black Flags had done before. Only this time there was only the cavalry and camel corps to come in on their flank. Vandeleur, writing home within a week of the event, said: 'The 9th, which was the first battalion to form up on the new front, had just got into position when down came another charge of horse, almost a better one than the last, followed by the attack of the footmen. Laurie's battery, on our left, soon exhausted its ammunition, but there were Maxims on our right, and the noise was tremendous. If the Green Flags had co-operated with the former attack and caught us in rear when we were engaged in front, it would have been extremely unpleasant. But the earlier attack had exhausted itself before the second came on, so we beat them in detail. The 1st British (Wauchope's) could be seen hurrying to support us, but the Dervish attack was done for before they came up. The thing was over and the cease fire sounded.'"

In "Seymour Vandeleur," in the chapter on "England on the Nile" (pages 135–136), Sir Ivor Maxse describes the state of the Egyptian Army before "one of the best days for Egypt occurred, when the Khedive signed the laconic decree, 'The Army is hereby disbanded.' That was in 1882. The young British officers who subsequently undertook to organize and command the squadrons, batteries and battalions of the new army, started the machine with a totally different conception of duty and military service to any which had hitherto prevailed. Indeed, the change was so bewildering to the native officers and men that at first the task seemed hopeless. However, with stubborn insular determination, they persevered on their own lines, without compromise, and without appearing to see any difficulty. Exact pay was handed out to the men on fixed dates; good barracks, solid food and clean clothing were provided; the discipline was strict and carefully enforced; promotion went solely by merit, and no intrigue could avail to alter a selection; furloughs were granted each year, and men went home to their squalid villages smart in appearance and with plenty of money in their pockets. They were no longer ashamed of themselves or their calling. When their term of six years' service expired, they left the colours to become local policemen. Then came years of active service, first on the lines of communication of Lord Wolseley's Nile Expedition, then on the frontier, continuously in touch with Dervishes, unsupported by other troops—with eyes always turned towards the desert and the enemy beyond. At intervals the Dervishes would attack patrols, or raid villages, and a skirmish would take place, a more or less serious affair, but always a useful experience to an army in training. Two pitched battles, at Ginniss in 1885 and Toski in 1889, attested the progress of the force. The fellaheen soldier began to feel he was a man, in fact became one. He at last understood his British officers, those curious foreigners who insisted on everyone doing his duty without shirking, and who did it themselves! In action, there they were always to the front, never excited; in cholera camp, still they were present working like slaves to stamp out the pestilence: always cheerful and approachable, yet maintaining their position as officers and the respect due to their rank."

Sir I. Maxse says elsewhere that Vandeleur "held that, though the Sudanese might be considered the flower of the army, the fellaheen cavalry, artillery and infantry were absolutely trustworthy troops."

This is a very fascinating book, and it grows upon the reader who takes it up a second time.

BUNBURY, VESEY THOMAS, Capt., was born 25 Sept. 1859, second son of the late Right Rev. Thomas Bunbury, D.D., Lord Bishop of Limerick. General Bunbury has the Coronation Medal of 1902. He married, in 1904, the Hon. Daisy Carleton, daughter of Baroness Dorchester.

FERGUSSON, CHARLES, Capt. and Brevet Major, was born in Edinburgh 17 Jan. 1865, eldest son of the 6th Baronet of Kilkerran, Ayrshire, and Edith (who died in 1871), daughter of the Marquis of Dalhousie (extinct). He was educated at Eton and Sandhurst; became Lieutenant, Grenadier Guards, 7 Nov. 1883; was Adjutant, Grenadier Guards, 11 April, 1890, to 10 April, 1894, and was promoted Captain 1 Oct. 1895. He was employed with the Egyptian Army from 23 Jan. 1896, to 15 Oct. 1903; served with the expedition to Dongola in 1896, during operations of 7 June and 19 Sept. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 3 Nov. 1896], and received the Egyptian Medal with two clasps. He served with the Nile Expedition in 1897; was present at the capture of Abu Hamed and subsequent occupation of Berber. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 25 Jan. 1898], and received the Brevet of Major 17 Dec. 1897, and two clasps to Egyptian Medal. He took part in the Nile Expedition of 1898; was present at the Battle of the Atbara and Khartoum; defeat of Ahmed Fedil's Army (severely wounded). He became Lieutenant-General on 18 Aug. 1914; commanded 9th Division, New Armies, British Expeditionary Force, 25 Oct. 1914, to 30 Dec. 1914; commanded 2nd Army Corps, British Expeditionary Force, 31 Dec. 1914, to 24 May, 1916; commanded 17th Army Corps, British Armies in France, from 25 May, 1916, to 31 March, 1919; was Military Governor of British Occupied German Territory from beginning of occupation until 15 Aug. 1919. He was seven times mentioned in Despatches, and created a K.C.B. in 1915, and K.C.M.G. in 1918. His foreign decorations are: France: Legion of Honour (Grand Officer) and Croix de Guerre avec Palme. Belgium: Order of the Crown (Grand Officer) and Croix de Guerre. Egypt: Medjidieh, 2nd Class. He had succeeded his father in 1907 as 7th Baronet of Kilkerran. In 1901 he married Lady Alice Mary Boyle, second daughter of the 7th Earl of Glasgow and Dorothea, daughter of Sir Edward Hunter-Blair, 4th Baronet, and they have three sons living: James, born 18 Sept. 1904; Simon Charles David, born 5 June, 1907, and Bernard Edward, born 6 May, 1911; and one daughter, Helen Dorothea.

CECIL, LORD EDWARD HERBERT, Brevet Major, was born on 12 July, 1867, and was the fourth son of the 3rd Marquess of Salisbury and of Georgina, daughter of the Hon. Sir Edward Hall Alderson, a Baron of the Exchequer. He was educated at Eton, and was gazetted to the Grenadier Guards 30 April, 1887, and was for some time on the Staff of Lord Wolseley, Commander-in-Chief in Ireland. He became Lieutenant 16 March, 1892. On 18 June, 1894, he married Violet Georgina, daughter of the late Admiral Maxse, and they had one daughter, Helen, and a son, George Edward, who was killed in action in France in Sept. 1914. As A.D.C. to the G.O. Commanding, he served with the Dongola Expeditionary Force in 1896, being present at the operations of 7 June and 19 Sept. 1896; was mentioned in Despatches 3 Nov. 1896; was given the Brevet of Major, and received the 4th Class Medjidie, the British Medal, and the Khedive's Medal with two clasps. He accompanied Sir Rennell Rodd in the special mission to King Menelik of Abyssinia in 1897, receiving the Star of Ethiopia and the Abyssinian Order. In 1898 he served in the Egyptian Campaign, which culminated in the fall of Khartoum and the conquest of the Sudan, being present at the action of Atbara and the Battle of Omdurman. Lord Edward Cecil was mentioned in Despatches 24 May and 30 Sept. 1898; received two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 15 Nov. 1898]: "Lord Edward Herbert Cecil, Capt. and Brevet Major, Grenadier Guards. In recognition of services in Egypt and the Sudan, including the Battles of Atbara and Khartoum." The Insignia were presented by the Queen at Windsor 1 Dec. 1898. He served throughout the South African War, in which he took a prominent part as Chief of the Staff, and afterwards as A.A.G. for the defence of Mafeking. Sir A. Conan Doyle tells us, in "The Great Boer War" (page 305), how, before the siege, "Baden-Powell, with the aid of an excellent group of special officers, who included Colonel Gould Adams, Lord Edward Cecil, the soldier son of England's Premier, and Colonel Hore, had done all that was possible to put the place in a state of defence." Lord Edward was subsequently Administrator of Marico and Rustenburg Districts (Queen's Medal with two clasps; Despatches, 8 Feb. 1901; Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 29 Nov. 1900). He returned to Egypt at the close of the South African War, and was subsequently for a time Sudan Secretary in Cairo. He was promoted to Major on 19 Aug. 1903, and Brevet Colonel 29 Nov. 1906, and retired 3 Aug. 1907, with the rank of Colonel. In 1904 Lord Edward became Agent-General of the Sudan and Director of Intelligence to the Egyptian Army at Cairo, where his conspicuous abilities soon came under the notice of Lord Cromer. In 1906 he was appointed Under Secretary of War to the Egyptian Government, and in the same year became Under Secretary of State for Finance, jointly with Mr. Mitchell-Innes, and in 1907, on the retirement of Mr. Mitchell-Innes, he became sole Under Secretary for Finance, and in 1912 was appointed, in succession to Sir Paul Harvey, Financial Adviser to the Egyptian Government, a post which he held up to the time of his death. He had become Colonel, and had retired from the Grenadier Guards on 3 Aug. 1907. The "Times" says of Lord Edward Cecil that "it fell to his lot, in a country where, perhaps more than in any other, all questions tend to resolve themselves into questions of finance, to take a prominent part in nearly every question of importance which arose in Egypt during a period of upwards of ten years. As Financial Adviser he had to deal with the new and unexpected situation created on the outbreak of the war and the consequent establishment of a protectorate in Egypt; and it is in no small measure due to the tact and firmness with which the financial aspects of the situation were handled that the Egyptian masses have remained quiet and contented throughout the war. Lord Edward Cecil possessed in a high degree that aptitude for public affairs which is a tradition of his great family. Imbued with the highest ideals and always unsparing of himself, he was ever most considerate and loyal both to superiors and subordinates, regardless of possible prejudice to his own interests or advancement. To all with whom he came in contact his manner was always most cordial and utterly devoid of condescension. In him the British Empire loses a servant who worked for it with a single-minded devotion to duty and without a thought of self-advancement. To his friends in Egypt and elsewhere (and they were many) Lord Edward's charm of manner, ability to talk well and interestingly on almost any subject, and readiness to help and advise when asked, will always be a grateful memory." He died at midnight on Saturday, 14 Dec. 1919, at Leysin, Switzerland, after a long illness contracted in serving his country.

Lord Edward Cecil.

Sir Hubert Hamilton was killed in action 14 Oct. 1914, at La Coûture, France.

Lord Ernest Hamilton, in "The First Seven Divisions" (page 146), says: "Sir Hubert Hamilton, the Divisional General, . . . came along on foot to inspect the trenches, disregarding warnings as to the great danger he was running. He proceeded on foot down the Richebourg Road, which was swept by shell fire, in company with Capt. Strutt, commanding the Royal Scots, and was almost immediately killed by a shell, Capt. Strutt, TECK, HIS SERENE HIGHNESS PRINCE FRANCIS JOSEPH LEOPOLD FREDERICK OF, Capt., was born at Kensington Palace 9 Jan. 1870, second son of the late Duke of Teck and of Her Royal Highness late Princess Mary Adelaide. He was educated at Wellington College; Cheltenham, and at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and was gazetted to the 9th Lancers 30 Jan. 1889; to the K.R.R.C. 17 April, 1889, and to the 1st Dragoons 8 Oct. 1890. He became Lieutenant 26 Aug. 1891, and Captain 25 July, 1894. He was A.D.C. to the General Officer Commanding at Quetta 25 Nov. 1896, to 2 Aug. 1897; was on Special Service, Egypt, 6 Aug. to 6 Dec. 1897; was employed with the Egyptian Army 7 Dec. 1897, to 15 Sept. 1898, and served in the Nile Expedition in 1897 (Medal). He again saw active service in the Nile Expedition of 1898; Battles of the Atbara and Khartoum. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 24 May and 30 Sept. 1898]; received two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 15 Nov. 1898]: "His Serene Highness Prince Francis Joseph Leopold Frederick of Teck, Capt., 1st Dragoons. In recognition of services during the recent operations in Egypt and the Sudan, including the Battles of the Atbara and Khartoum." The Insignia were presented by the Queen at Windsor 1 Dec. 1896. He was A.D.C. to the G.O.C., South-Eastern District, 11 Jan. to 23 July, 1899, and was Staff Captain, Remount Establishment, 24 July, 1899. He served in the South African War on the Staff from 1899–1902; employed with the Remount Department (graded D.A.A.G.), 29 May to 9 Dec. 1900. He was present at the operations in the Transvaal in May, 1902; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 1 April, 1901]; was given the Brevet of Major, and received the Queen's Medal with three clasps. He became Major 29 Nov. 1900, and retired from the Army in 1902. Prince Francis was created a K.C.V.O., and was a Knight of Justice of St. John of Jerusalem. He died 22 Oct. 1910.

The following is an extract from an appreciation of Prince Francis which appeared in the "Times" of 24 Oct. 1910:

"The death of Prince Francis will be mourned by a singularly large circle of friends. A man of frank and genial personality, an interesting companion, a keen sportsman, and a staunch friend, he was extremely popular in society. 'He had great charm,' a gentleman who had known the Prince for many years remarked on hearing of his serious illness, 'and everybody who knew him liked him enormously.' In his outlook upon life and in temperament generally, Prince Francis was essentially English Like his brothers and sister, he was devoted to his mother, and proud of his descent from George III. The Duchess of Teck, for her part, was devoted to her sons. The Bishop of Peterborough once remarked—as recorded in Sir C. Kinlock-Cooke's Memoir of the Princess: 'The Duchess of Teck often talked to me about her boys, sometimes with tears in her eyes.' On one occasion she said to Mrs. Dalrymple, speaking with much earnestness, "I pray they may each of them in turn grow up a credit to us all, and be thorough English boys; they are so as yet, thank God."'

"The happy childhood of the Queen and her brothers at the White Lodge had a lasting effect upon their characters. The words of a correspondent who contributed to the 'Times' an appreciation of Queen Mary soon after the death of the late King, may fittingly be recalled: 'A singularly united family, and one, moreover, taught from the earliest days that a man's life does not consist in the abundance of his possessions, sister and brothers grew up to enjoy simple, wholesome pleasures, to make their own amusements, enter into each other's games and sports, and share each other's childish joys and sorrows. . . . The Duke and Duchess of Teck, believing as they did most thoroughly in the value of home life, were careful never to omit those little family observances which mean so much to the young. Every birthday, as it came round, was duly remarked by some special concession to the honoured child. . . . The remembrance of these days and of many joyous Christmases spent in the family circle is still among their happiest recollections.'

"In the published correspondence of the Duchess of Teck and in her diary there are frequent references to Prince Francis and the other children. One interesting passage may be quoted. Writing to the Hon. Lucy Kerr, in Sept. 1872, the Duchess says: 'I am thankful to say that May is once more a strong child, though a tall, wiry one by the side of her sturdy brothers, the younger of whom is a perfect little giant and a great pet. Dolly and Frank are splendid specimens of boyhood, the one brown-haired, the other chestnut-brown, and fully answer to their sister's appellation of "Beauty Boys."'

"Prince Francis grew up with a passion for the English open-air life, for English sports and for the British Army. Like his brothers, he was destined for a military career. It was the wish of the Duchess of Teck that her sons should be soldiers, and one after another they gratified this desire of their mother's heart by entering the Army.

"Sir C. Kinlock-Cooke relates that one day the Princess was making some purchases at a well-known shop in the West End of London. Ascertaining from one of the partners in the firm that he had boys at school, she began talking about her own sons, remarking, 'No one knows what we parents have to go through with all these examinations.' Each of the sons was sent to a public school—Prince Francis to Wellington, and afterwards to Cheltenham. . . .

"Prince Francis was an expert horseman and an enthusiastic fox hunter. Horses, indeed, may be said to have been a hobby with him. His work in the Remount Department, therefore, was a labour of love. In Ireland, when quartered in Dublin, he won the sympathy of the humbler classes, his courteous and genial manners, his kindness of heart and his cheerfulness being still recollected by those whom he visited in hospital there. Some years ago he paid a visit to India, while his friend, Lord Sandhurst, was the Governor of Bombay, and, with characteristic eagerness to acquire knowledge of any subject in which he was interested, took the opportunity to study some phases of the problem of Indian administration. The Prince was 'thorough' in everything he undertook. He was deeply interested in his military work, and was known in the Army as a keen and capable soldier. His devoted labours in the cause of the medical charities of London—and more particularly on behalf of the Middlesex Hospital—are well known. The Prince was an enthusiastic theatre-goer, and was generally to be seen in the audience on the occasion of a 'first-night.' His was a familiar figure at the gatherings of the Beefsteak Club. . . .

"Keenly interested in every aspect of motoring, Prince Francis—with the approval of King Edward, Patron of the Royal Automobile Club—accepted the unanimous invitation of the club, in June, 1908, to succeed Mr. (now Sir) C. D. Rose, M.P., as its chairman. In taking the chair, on the proposition of the Hon. Arthur Stanley, seconded by Sir Boverton Redwood, Prince Francis said: 'I will do my best to promote the welfare of the Royal Automobile Club in every possible way. I will leave no stone unturned to see that the interests of the automobile world of Great Britain and Ireland receive careful attention.' He was as good as his word, and again gave the amplest proofs of his administrative ability and his absolute mastery of details, while he spared no pains to encourage the vigorous growth of local associations. As chairman of the R.A.C. he was closely concerned in the erection of the new club house in Pall Mall, and devoted much thought and care to the decoration of the building. The scheme also by which the R.A.C. admitted associate members was largely due to him. Motoring may be said to have lost in him a very valuable friend, whose great influence and thoughtful advice were ever at its service."

PEYTON, WILLIAM ELIOT, Capt., was born 7 May, 1866, third son of the late Colonel J. Peyton, late Commanding 7th Dragoon Guards. He was educated at Brighton College, and enlisted in the 7th Dragoon Guards in 1885; was commissioned 7th Dragoon Guards 18 June, 1887; became

In recognition of services during the recent operations in the Sudan, including the Battles of Atbara and Khartum." The Insignia were presented to him by the Queen at Windsor 1 Dec. 1898. He was promoted to Major 15 Oct. 1899. He served in the South African War from 19 May, 1900, to 25 Oct. 1900, as Special Service Officer. He served with Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry. He took part in the operations in Natal, May to June, 1900, including the action at Laing's Nek. Operations in the Transvaal, June to Aug. 1900; operations in the Orange River Colony, Sept. 1900. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 8 Feb. 1901; was given the Brevet of Lieut.-Colonel 29 Nov. 1900, and received the Queen's Medal with three clasps. He became Lieut.-Colonel 10 Jan. 1907, and commanded the 15th Hussars from 1903 to 1907; was given the Brevet of Colonel 5 May, 1905, and promoted to Colonel 10 Oct. 1907; was A.Q.M.G., H.Q., India, 18 Oct. 1907, to 2 July, 1908; commanded Meerut Cavalry Brigade 3 July, 1908, to 30 June, 1912; was Military Secretary to H.E. the Commander-in-Chief in India 1 July, 1912, to 7 March, 1914, and Delhi Herald of Arms Extraordinary for the occasion of the Coronation Durbar 12 Dec. 1911. On the outbreak of the European War he became G.S.O.1, 1st Mounted Division, Central Force, Home Defence, and he commanded the 2nd Mounted Division on Gallipoli Peninsula; action of 21 Aug. 1915, and final evacuation 19 Dec. 1915 (Despatches twice). On 26 Oct. 1914, he was promoted to Major-General. He commanded the Western Frontier Force, Egypt (20 Jan. 1916, to 7 May, 1916) in the expedition against the Senussi, including the reoccupation of Barani and Sollum, and the rescue of the shipwrecked British prisoners of H.M.S. Tara (received special thanks of the Admiralty; Despatches). General Peyton was Military Secretary, British Armies in France, 8 May, 1916, to 6 April, 1918; Army Commander, Reserve Army, British Armies in France, 7 April, 1918, to 3 July, 1918; commanded the 40th Division during the operations in France and Flanders 4 July, 1918, to March, 1919; commanded the cavalry of the British Army on the Rhine. He was created a K.C.B. (1917); Commandeur, Légion d'Honneur; was given the Order of the Nile, Second Class, 1916. He was appointed Colonel of the 15th Hussars, 1916. Sir William Peyton married (1st) Mabel Maria (who died in 1901), daughter of the late Lieut.-General the Hon. E. T. Gage, C.B., third son of the 4th Viscount Gage, and they had one daughter. He married (2ndly) in 1903, Gertrude (who died in 1916), daughter of Major-General A. R. Lemprière and widow of Capt. Stuart Robertson, 14th Hussars, and they had one son.

In Sir John Maxwell's Despatch, dated 9 April, 1916, he described the operations under General Peyton and the distinguished services of Brigadier-General H. T. Lukin, C.M.G., D.S.O., Colonel Soutar, the Duke of Westminster and other officers.

He concludes his Despatch with these words: "I think it may be fairly claimed that seldom has a small campaign been so completely successful or had such far-reaching results. The effect of this success has been to remove the anxiety which was at once felt as to the possibility of hostile outbreaks in Egypt itself, where agitation was known to be rife. The attitude of the people in Alexandria, and more especially of the very large Bedouin population of the Behera province, has completely changed, and any prestige which we have lost through the evacuation of Sollum has been more than recovered. Moreover, through his failure as a temporal leader, Sayed Ahmed has lost much of the influence which was attached to him as a spiritual head."

MACBEAN, JOHN ALBERT EMMANUEL, Capt., was born 6 June, 1865, and joined the Royal Dublin Fusiliers 4 May, 1887, becoming Lieutenant 6 March, 1889, and Captain 6 May, 1896. The D.S.O., Warrant and Statutes were sent to Miss Blanche Sitwell for Colonel Sitwell's daughter, Miss C. D. C. Sitwell. Colonel Sitwell was killed in action 24 Feb. 1900. Sir A. Conan Doyle says, on pages 216 to 219 of "The Great Boer War":

"Brigadier Fitzroy Hart, to whom the assault was entrusted, is in some ways as singular and picturesque a type as has been evolved in the war. A dandy soldier, always the picture of neatness from the top of his helmet to the heels of his well-polished brown boots, he brings to military matters the same precision which he affects in dress. Pedantic in his accuracy, he actually at the battle of Colenso drilled the Irish Brigade for half an hour before leading them into action, and threw out markers under a deadly fire in order that his change from close to extended formation might be academically correct. The heavy loss of the brigade at this action was to some extent ascribed to him, and affected his popularity; but as his men came to know him better—his romantic bravery, his whimsical soldierly humour—their dislike changed into admiration. His personal disregard for danger was notorious and reprehensible. 'Where is General Hart?' asked someone in action. 'I have not seen him, but I know where you will find him. Go ahead of the skirmish line, and you will see him standing on a rock,' was the answer. He bore a charmed life. It was a danger to be near him. 'Whom are you going to?' 'General Hart,' said the aide-de-camp. 'Then good-bye!' cried his fellows. A grim humour ran through his nature. It is gravely recorded and widely believed that he lined up a regiment on a hill-top in order to teach them not to shrink from fire. Amid the laughter of his Irishmen, he walked through the open files of his firing line holding a laggard by the ear. This was the man who had put such a spirit into the Irish Brigade that amid that army of valiant men there were none who held such a record. 'Their rushes were the quickest, their rushes were the longest, and they stayed the shortest time under cover,' said a shrewd military observer. To Hart and his brigade was given the task of clearing the way to Ladysmith.

"The regiments which he took with him on his perilous enterprise were the 1st Inniskilling Fusiliers, the 2nd Dublin Fusiliers, the 1st Connaught Rangers, and the Imperial Light Infantry, the whole forming the famous 5th Brigade. They were already in the extreme British advance, and now, as they moved forwards, the Durham Light Infantry and the 1st Rifle Brigade from Lyttelton's Brigade came up to take their place. The hill to be taken lay on the right, and the soldiers were compelled to pass in single file under a heavy fire for more than a mile until they reached the spot which seemed best for their enterprise. There, short already of sixty of their comrades, they assembled and began a cautious advance upon the lines of trenches and sangars which seamed the brown slope above them.

"For a time they were able to keep some cover, and the casualties were comparatively few. But now at last, as the evening sun threw a long shadow from the hills, the leading regiment, the Inniskillings, found themselves at the utmost fringe of boulders with a clear slope between them and the main trench of the enemy. Up there where the shrapnel was spurting and the great lyddite shells crashing they could dimly see a line of bearded faces and the black dots of the slouch hats. With a yell the Inniskillings sprang out, carried with a rush the first trench, and charged desperately onwards for the second one. It was a supremely dashing attack against supremely steady resistance, for among all their gallant deeds the Boers have never fought better than on that February evening. Amid such a smashing shell fire as living mortals have never yet endured they stood doggedly, these hardy men of the veldt, and fired fast and true into the fiery ranks of the Irishmen. The yell of the stormers was answered by the remorseless roar of the Mausers and the deep-chested shouts of the farmers. Up and up surged the infantry, falling, rising, dashing bull-headed at the crackling line of the trench. But still the bearded faces glared at them over the edge, and still the sheet of lead pelted through their ranks. The regiment staggered, came on, staggered again, was overtaken by supporting companies of the Dublins and the Connaughts, came on, staggered once more, and finally dissolved into shreds, who ran swiftly back for cover, threading their way among their stricken comrades. Never on this earth was there a retreat of which the survivors had less reason to be ashamed. They had held on to the utmost capacity of human endurance. Their colonel, ten officers, and more than half the regiment were lying on the fatal hill. Honour to them, and honour also to the gallant Dutchmen who, rooted in the trenches, had faced the rush and fury of such an onslaught! To-day to them, to-morrow to us; but it is for a soldier to thank the God of battles for worthy foes.

"It is one thing, however, to repulse the British soldier, and it is another to rout him. Within a few hundred yards of their horrible ordeal at Magersfontein, the Highlanders re-formed into a military body. So now the Irishmen fell back no farther than the nearest cover, and there held grimly on to the ground which they had won. If you would know the advantage which the defence has over the attack, then do you come and assault this line of tenacious men, now in your hour of victory and exultation, friend Boer! Friend Boer did attempt it, and skilfully too, moving a flanking party to sweep the position with their fire. But the brigade, though sorely hurt, held them off without difficulty, and was found on the morning of the 24th to be still lying upon the ground which they had won.

"Our losses had been very heavy—Colonel Thackeray of the Inniskillings, Colonel Sitwell of the Dublins, three majors, twenty officers, and a total of about 600 out of 1,200 actually engaged. To take such punishment and to remain undemoralized is the supreme test to which troops can be put. Could the loss have been avoided? By following the original line of advance from Monte Christo, perhaps, when we should have turned the enemy's left. But otherwise no. The hill was in the way, and had to be taken. In the war game you cannot play without a stake. You lose and you pay forfeit, and where the game is fair the best player is he who pays with the best grace. The attack was well prepared, well delivered, and only miscarried on account of the excellence of the defence. We proved once more, what we had proved so often before, that all valour and all discipline will not avail in a frontal attack against brave, cool-headed men armed with quick-firing rifles.

"While the Irish Brigade assaulted Railway Hill an attack had been made upon the left, which was probably meant as a demonstration to keep the Boers from reinforcing their comrades rather than as an actual attempt upon their lines. Such as it was, however, it cost the life of at least one brave soldier, for Colonel Thorold of the Welsh Fusiliers was among the fallen. Thorold, Thackeray and Sitwell in one evening. Who can say that British colonels have not given their men a lead?"

He was severely wounded; mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 4 Nov. 1900], and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 15 Jan. 1901]: "Charles Edward Joseph Glynn O'Malley, Capt., 6th Battn., Middlesex Regt. In recognition of his services during the recent operations in Ashanti." He was invested by the King 24 Oct. 1901. He served in the South African War, 1902, taking part in the operations in Cape Colony, April to 31 May, 1902 (he received the Queen's Medal with two clasps). He was present at the relief of Ookiep, with Colonel Cowper, C.M.G. He served with the Namaqua Field Force. Capt. O'Malley, who had retired and joined the Special Reserve of Officers, died at Southsea 9 April, 1910.

PHILLIPS, EDWARD HAWTIN, Lieut., was born 22 Feb. 1876, son of John Hawtin Phillips, of Hurstcroft, Ascot, Berkshire, and of 101, Cromwell Road, London, S.W. He was educated at Wellington College (Benson, 1890–93), and entered the Royal Artillery 16 Jan. 1897, as Second Lieutenant, from the Militia; served in the operations in Sierra Leone in 1898–99, in the Protectorate Expedition (Medal and clasp), and became Lieutenant, 1900. In 1900 he served in West Africa, took part in the operations in Ashanti, and was present at the relief of Kumassi, when he was severely wounded. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 4 Dec. 1900], received the Medal with clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 15 Jan. 1901]: "Edward Hawtin Phillips, Lieut., Royal Artillery. In recognition of services during the recent operations in Ashanti." The Insignia were presented by the King, about June, 1901. He had been employed with the West African Frontier Force from 22 April, 1899, to 28 Oct. 1900. He served in the South African War, 1901–02; was severely wounded; took part in the operations in the Orange River Colony, Jan. to March, 1902, and in the operations in Cape Colony and the Transvaal, March to May, 1902. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 18 July, 1902], and received the Queen's Medal with five clasps. He became Captain 11 March, 1902, and was again employed with the West African Frontier Force 23 Jan. 1904, to 16 Nov. 1905, in Northern Nigeria, where he served in the operations against the people of Semolika, receiving the Medal with clasp. He was Adjutant, Royal Horse Artillery, 4 Dec. 1908, to March, 1914, when he was promoted to Major, into the Royal Field Artillery, and was appointed to command the 28th Battery. Capt. Phillips came from India with the Meerut Division of the Indian Army Corps, to take part in the European War, and had only been three days at the Front when he was wounded, near La Bassée, on the 5th of Nov. 1914, and died the next day. An obituary notice of him appeared in the "Times" of 2 Dec. 1914, and his death is recorded in the Army List for Dec. 1914. The Inspector-General of Artillery wrote of Major Phillips: "There was no man in all the Artillery under my control, belonging to this force, whom I would have selected before him for any duty which called for all the highest personal qualifications of a soldier. It was the same in India. If I wanted anything done or tried, I always knew it could never be in better hands than his. As a most gallant soldier and gentleman, a thorough sportsman and a true friend, he will be very deeply regretted by the regiment" ("Wellington Year Book," 1914). His younger brother, Capt. R. N. Phillips, Royal Welsh Fusiliers, died on the 27th of Dec. 1914, of wounds received in action. Major Phillips was a keen sportsman, and very fond of hunting, pig-sticking and big game shooting. He was badly mauled by a tiger in India, and had a stiff arm and hand, which did not prevent him from taking his pilot's certificate at Brooklands in May, 1914. He was the hero of the rescue at a dangerous fire explosion (see "Royal Artillery Institution Leaflet," Dec. 1914). He was a man of unlimited vigour, cheerfulness and courage.

SHORTLAND, HENRY VINCENT, Lieut., was the third son of Colonel Daniel Vincent Shortland, R.A. He was gazetted to the Royal Irish Regt., becoming Lieutenant 26 May, 1894. He served in West Africa, 1897–98 (Medal with clasp), and in Ashanti, 1900. He was mentioned in Despatches and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 15 Jan. 1901]: "Henry Vincent Shortland, Lieut., 3rd Battn. Royal Irish Regt. In recognition of services during the recent operations in Ashanti." The Insignia were presented by the King 25 July, 1901. He was promoted Captain. Capt. He was promoted to Captain 28 May, 1899; was employed with the Central African Rifles, and with the King's African Rifles, 12 April, 1899, to 11 April, 1902, and served with the 2nd British Central African Regt. in the Ashanti Campaign of 1900. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 8 March, 1901], and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 April, 1901]: " Alister Fraser Gordon, Capt., Gordon Highlanders. In recognition of services during the recent operations in Ashanti." Invested by the King 24 Oct. 1902. He served in the South African War, 1901–02, as Railway Staff Officer and Station Staff Officer, taking part in the operations in the Transvaal, Sept. 1901, to 31 May, 1902 (Queen's Medal with three clasps). He was G.S.O., 3rd Grade, Coast Defences, Northern Command, 18 Feb. 1908, to 17 Feb. 1912; was promoted to Major 4 July, 1908; was D.A.A. and Q.M.G., Highland Division, Scottish Command, 6 June, 1913, to 20 Jan. 1914. He served in the European War from 1914, as D.A.A. and Q.M.G. 5 Aug. 1914, to 17 Sept. 1914; was promoted Lieutenant-Colonel, Gordon Highlanders, in April, 1915, and was severely wounded in the leg at the Battle of Festubert 16 May, 1915; A.A. and Q.M.G. 18 Sept. 1914, to 9 April, 1915; G.S.O., 2nd Grade, War Office (temporary), 1 Dec. 1915, to 12 Feb. 1916; Brigade Commander 13 Feb. 1916. For his services in the European War he was six times mentioned in Despatches, and created a C.M.G. in 1915, and Brevet Colonel in 1917. Temporary Brigadier-General A. F. Gordon died on the 31st of July, 1917, of wounds received in action, aged 45. He was a highly scientific and brilliant officer—a loss to the Army and the nation. The following is an account of General Gordon's death: " On the Sunday morning, 29 July, 1917, General Gordon was visiting the front-line trenches, as was his custom, when the trench that he was in was hit by a direct German shell, which killed his Brigade Major and two Gordon Highland N.C.O.'s on the spot, and mortally wounded him. He died two days later in the Casualty Clearing Station to which he had been carried, and was buried in the Cemetery at Esporinghe. By the King's Special Order, a printed copy of his six Mentions in the European War was sent from the War Office to Mrs. Alister Gordon, 18 Dec. 1917, with a kind message of 'high appreciation of these services,' by His Majesty." He had married, in Jan. 1908, Pilar Mary, daughter of the late C. E. H. Edmondstoune Cranstoun, of Corehouse, and they had one son, Alastair Joseph Edgar, and two daughters, Margaret Colette Mary and Elizabeth Pilar Mary.

Archibald J. Murray.

Field-Marshal Lord Allenby said, in his Despatch dated 28 June, 1919 [London Gazette, 11 Aug. 1919]:

"The campaigns in Sinai, Palestine and Syria formed an important part of the general Allied effort against the Central Powers, and I propose to give here a brief summary of their relation to the operations in the main theatre on the Western Front, of their general features and results. The forces employed in this theatre may be regarded in the nature of a detachment from the main forces on the Western Front; but engaged in the same great battle, changing its rôle and action according to the sway of events in the main theatre and the other minor theatres. In the first instance, the object of this detachment was the protection of Egypt and the Suez Canal, a vital link in the communications of the Allies. By the summer of 1917, when I assumed command of the Egyptian Expeditionary Force, Lieut.-General Sir A. Murray's brilliant campaign in Sinai had removed the danger to Egypt, and had forced the enemy back across his own frontiers. The original purpose of the detachment had been accomplished. But events elsewhere had given a fresh importance and another rôle to the operations in this theatre. The collapse of Russia had given a new lease of life to the Central Powers' weakest member, and had freed the main Turkish forces for action elsewhere. It was believed that they would be used in an offensive, planned and organized by the Germans, for the recapture of Bagdad. It was therefore important to keep up the pressure on Turkey, and to anticipate the threatened attack on Bagdad by striking hard elsewhere. The operations which commenced with the Gaza–Beersheba Battle, and led to the capture of Jerusalem and the freeing of all Southern Palestine, were therefore planned. These operations had far-reaching results. The danger to Mesopotamia was removed, and it became possible to reduce the forces in that theatre. Instead of drawing fresh strength from the reserve of Turkish troops released by Russia's collapse, the Central Alliance found themselves compelled to send further support to their Eastern Ally; while a fresh impetus was given to the Arab struggle for freedom. The moral results were even greater. Germany, hard put to it to hold her own in the close-locked struggle in the West, saw a great blow struck at her Eastern ambitions; while the capture of Jerusalem stirred the imagination of the Christian world. I desire to express my indebtedness to my predecessor, Lieut.-General Sir A. J. Murray, who, by his bridging of the desert between Egypt and Palestine, laid the foundations for the subsequent advances of the Egyptian Expeditionary Force. I reaped the fruits of his foresight and strategical imagination, which brought the waters of the Nile to the borders of Palestine, planned the skilful military operations by which the Turks were driven from strong positions in the desert over the frontier of Egypt, and carried a standard gauge railway to the gates of Gaza. The organization he created, both in Sinai and in Egypt, stood all tests and formed the corner-stone of my successes."

Mr. W. T. Massey says, in Chapter IV. of "The Desert Campaigns": "After Lord Kitchener had paid his memorable visit to Gallipoli, he came to Egypt, which, from long associations, was bound to hold a firm place in his war anxieties. At that time it was believed the Germans were sending four or six divisions to Constantinople to form the backbone of a Turkish Army to March across the Sinai desert and try to cut the Suez Canal, that artery of traffic between East and West described by the Kaiser as the 'jugular vein of the British Empire.' Lord Kitchener went to the Canal, saw the defences, and is credited with the remark made to a distinguished General: 'Are you defending the Canal, or is the Canal defending you?' That brief question so admirably sums up the situation as it was in Egypt at the time of the evacuation of Gallipoli that it deserves to be true. I know there is one school of military thought which strongly supports the view that our best policy was to allow the Turk to encounter the difficulties of the desert and to meet him on the Canal or within a few miles of it. General Sir John Maxwell said to me at the end of 1914: 'The desert is our great ally, and it will beat the Turk in the end.' There is much force in that, I agree, but the attack of Feb. 1915, proved that the Turk could bring a substantial body of troops over the desert and hold up shipping in the Canal, and if, as the Turk claimed, that expedition was in the nature of a reconnaissance, when six-inch guns were hauled into action and hit one of the ships of the Indian Marine in the waterway, the knowledge gained during the march was of great value for any future attack. And we ascertained a year and a half later at the Battle of Romani (which is not much more than twenty-five miles from Port Said), that the knowledge was brought into such practical use that eight-inch as well as six-inch guns were transported over the desert a hundred miles from any Turkish railway. It is claimed by the critics of the scheme which Sir Archibald Murray lost no time in putting into operation, that if the Turks' big guns got within range of the Canal they could not damage it, that no long-range fire would breach its banks, and that the stoppage of shipping for a week, a fortnight, or a month, till such time as want of water and supplies compelled the Turk to retire, was of no consequence. To this I reply that there is no certainty that if the Turks once stopped traffic on the Canal they would ever lack supplies, for if they scored such a success they would concentrate all their energies on holding the advantage. Further, no military censorship would prevent the news reaching the people in Egypt, that home of exaggerations based on a substratum of fact. Egyptian opinion strongly leans on the winning side, and the regard in which we are held in Egypt is because of our strength, and not for the lasting good we have done the people. An undercurrent of disaffection would have been inconvenient; open rebellion would have compelled the retention of the whole of the troops in the country in the spring of 1916. The Australians and New Zealanders and some of the divisions of tried troops were urgently needed on the Western front. And then what would have been the consequences in India, in Afghanistan, in Persia, if the fact was established that the Turks had got the British Empire by its Suez Canal throat? How could we supply our Army in Mesopotamia, which was then, as we afterwards had the pain of learning, in sore straits from lack of munitions, rations, transport, medical supplies and comforts? . . . General Murray, taking the wide view that his responsibilities were for the whole Empire and not for Egypt alone, tackled the strategic problem by 'thinking Imperially,' and, looking at the nature of subsequent operations, few will say he was wrong. To my mind the most eloquent proof that he was absolutely right is to be found in the events of July and Aug., when the Turks, with an enterprise which all military men must admire, brought some 20,000 men and heavy guns up to Romani across an exceedingly difficult piece of desert, and strongly attacked our defences. And he kept up a fight for ten days, although harassed by some of the finest irregular cavalry in the world. The new strategic plan meant vast expenditure in money and labour, but it secured the safety of the Canal at least during the war, and perhaps for all time. The vast work of preparation could not be more strikingly illustrated than by realizing what was done in making railways and roads, laying down pipe lines for water supply, and the quantities of material used on the eastern defences of Egypt. The good work has gone on at an ever accelerated pace; the railway, then some miles short of El Arish, has been thrust out to Rafa, on the Turco-Egyptian frontier, to Khan Yunus, and to Deir el Belar, just short of Gaza, another seventy miles. Pipes have gone forward, too, and the amount of sandbags and barbed wire needed and supplied has grown enormously. A glance at the map shows the extent of ground covered. The engineering work which had to be undertaken shows how the Sinai Desert has been throbbing with life and industry. It is due to the troops engaged in Egypt that people at home should know the extent of the labour which fell upon them during a very trying period. It was not all honey for a man in the Egyptian Expeditionary Force." Mr Massey says, in Chapter VIII.: "The Battle of Romani was the most important battle fought on Egyptian territory during the campaign. It proved beyond doubt the wisdom of General Murray's policy in going out to meet the enemy and denying him all the ground which was necessary for him if he were to attack the Canal with even temporary success. . . . Our victory there once and for all settled the attempts of the Turks to get to the Canal, for once Romani was won, nothing could prevent us from compelling an advancing enemy to meet us on ground of our choice, getting farther east every day, with the best sites always entrenched. Romani will stand out as the big decisive battle fought on Egyptian soil in this war, and it put an end to the dream of the Kaiser of bleeding the British Empire to death by severing what he had well termed its most vital artery." Mr. Massey goes on to describe the Battle of Maghdaba and the Rafa victory; the campaign against the Senussi; the march on Sollum and the dash on Siwa. He gives accounts of the doings of Generals Chetwode and Chauvel, and later on in the book of General Peyton, and extols the fighting qualities of the Australians and New Zealanders.

Sir Archibald Murray was created a K.C.M.G. in 1915, and a G.C.M.G. in 1917; is Grand Officier, Legion of Honour; Grand Cordon, White Eagle of Serbia; Grand Cordon of the Nile; Grand Officer, St. Maurice and St. Lazarus, Italy; Grand Cordon of the Sacred Treasure, Japan; G.O.C., Commanding Aldershot Division, 1 Oct. 1917, to 14 Nov. 1919. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 26 Jan. 1900]; received the Queen's Medal with four clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Walter Fullerton Lodovic Lindsay, Lieut.-Colonel, Royal Artillery. In recognition of services during the recent operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the King 3 June, 1901. He had become Lieutenant-Colonel 14 Nov. 1900, and he was given the Brevet of Colonel 10 Feb. 1904, becoming Colonel 29 Nov. 1905. He was Staff Officer for Horse and Field Artillery, Southern Command, 29 Nov. 1905, to 20 July, 1906. Commander of Horse and Field Artillery, Southern Command, 20 Aug. 1906, to 19 Aug. 1907; Temporary Brigadier-General, Commanding Artillery, 3rd Division, Southern Command, 20 Aug. 1907, to 30 Sept. 1908; Inspector of Royal Horse and Royal Field Artillery 1 Oct. 1908, to 30 April, 1912; promoted to Major-General 7 Feb. 1912; G.O.C., West Lancashire Division, Western Command, 3 June, 1912, to 4 Aug. 1914. He served in the European War, 1914–15, as Major-General Commanding Royal Artillery from 5 Aug. 1914, and Inspector of Royal Horse and Royal Field Artillery from 1 March, 1915, to 8 April, 1915. For his services in the European War he was mentioned in Despatches, and created a K.C.B. (1916). Sir Walter Lindsay retired in Oct. 1917.

THOMAS, SIR GODFREY VIGNOLES, Lieut.-Colonel, Bart., was born 21 March, 1856, at Hafod, Cardiganshire, son of Sir Godfrey John Thomas, 8th Bart, and Emily, daughter of W. Chambers. He succeeded his father as 9th Baronet in 1861; was educated at Brighton College, and at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and was gazetted to the Royal Artillery 28 Jan. 1875. He served in the Afghan War, 1878–79, being present at the occupation of Kandahar and Khelat-i-Ghilzai (Medal). He served in the Egyptian Expedition, 1882–84, and was present at the action at Kassassin of 9 Sept.; at the Battle of Tel-el-Kebir, and the forced march to Cairo (Medal with clasp, and Bronze Star). He was promoted to Captain 1 Jan. 1884, and in that year served in the Sudan, being present at the Battle of Teb (horse killed), Relief of Tokar, Battle of Tamai, and affair at Tamanieh (two clasps, 4th Class Medjidie). He was Adjutant, Royal Artillery, 2 April, 1890, to 2 March, 1892, and became Major 3 March, 1892. He served in the South African War, 1899–1901, being present in the advance on Kimberley and at the Relief of Kimberley. Operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900, including operations at Paardeberg; actions at Poplar Grove, Dreifontein, Karee Siding, Houtnek (Thoba Mountain), Zand River and Vet River (5 and 6 May). Operations in the Transvaal in May and June, 1900, including actions near Johannesburg, Pretoria and Diamond Hill. Operations in the Transvaal, west of Pretoria. Operations in Orange River Colony, including actions at Bethlehem and Wittebergen. C.R.A., Johannesburg District. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 16 April and 7 May, 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with seven clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Godfrey Vignoles Thomas, Bart., Lieut.-Colonel, Royal Artillery. In recognition of services during the recent operations in South Africa." He was invested by the King 17 Feb. 1901. Sir Godfrey Thomas became Lieutenant-Colonel 14 Nov. 1900, and was given the Brevet of Colonel 10 Feb. 1904, becoming Colonel 6 Aug. 1906. He was created a C.B. in 1904; was Staff Officer for Horse and Field Artillery, Southern Command, 6 Aug. 1906, to 21 Dec. 1907 and retired 18 Jan. 1911. He served in the European War as Brigadier-General, 3rd Division, Royal Artillery, 1914–17. Sir Godfrey Thomas died in 1919. He had married, 30 April, 1887, in London, Mary F. Isabella, daughter of the late C. Oppenheim, Esq., of 40, Great Cumberland Place, W., and they had one son, Godfrey John Vignoles Thomas, born 14 April, 1889, who has now succeeded his father as 10th Baronet.

Godfrey V. Thomas.

HUNTER-WESTON, AYLMER, Brevet-Major, was born 23 Sept. 1864, eldest son of Lieut.-Colonel Gould Hunter-Weston and Mrs. Jane Hunter-Weston, of Hunterston, Ayrshire, Scotland. He was educated at Wellington College; at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and at the Staff College. He joined the Royal Engineers in 1884, and became Captain in 1892. Lieut. Hunter-Weston took part in the Miranzai Expedition in 1891, as a Company Officer in the Bengal Sappers and Miners. In 1894 he served as a Captain Commanding a company of Bengal Sappers and Miners in the Waziristan Delimitation Escort, and was present at the night action of Wana (Despatches). He commanded two companies of Bengal Sappers and Miners, and was Acting C.R.E. on Sir William Lockhart's Staff with the Waziristan Field Force, 1894–95 (Despatches; Brevet of Major, and Medal with clasp). He served with the Dongola Expeditionary Force in 1896, as a Special Service Officer on Sir Herbert Kitchener's Staff, and was present at the Battle of Firket (Despatches; 4th Class Medjidie; Queen's Medal; Khedive's Medal with clasp). Brevet-Major Aylmer Hunter-Weston served in the South African War from 1899 to 1901. He was successively in command of Mounted Engineers; Commanding Royal Engineers with Lieut.-General French's Cavalry Division; D.A.A.G., Cavalry Division; Chief Staff Officer to Lieut.-General French, and finally in independent command of a Mounted Column. He was present at the operations round Colesberg; actions at Dekiel's Drift and Klip Drift; Relief of Kimberley; operations at Paardeberg, and actions near Poplar Grove, Dreifontein, Thaba Nchu, Karee Siding, Zand River, Johannesburg, Diamond Hill, Belfast, Carolina, Barberton, Ermelo, Pietretief, etc, etc. During the advance to Pretoria he commanded the cavalry raids described below. Lieut.-General Sir Aylmer Hunter-Weston, Royal Engineers, gained the D.S.O. while holding the rank of Brevet-Major, for distinguished service in the South African War (1899–1901), and especially for his success in breaking through the Boer positions and cutting the railway behind them. He commanded five such raids, the parties in each case being composed of Mounted Royal Engineers and Cavalry. His principal raids were made with the object of cutting the railway (1) north of Bloemfontein, at Rustfontein, 13 March; (2) north of Kronstadt, near Amerika Siding, 11 and 12 May; (3) north of Bloemhof, at Grootvlei, 22 and 23 May; (4) east of Pretoria (Delagoa Bay Railway), 1 and 2 June; and (5) north of Pretoria 5 June, 1900.

Referring to Major Aylmer Hunter-Weston, and the raids carried out by him in the South African War, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, in his historic work, "The Great Boer War," writes as under:

"There is a Victoria Cross gallantry which leads to nothing save personal decoration, and there is another and far higher gallantry of calculation, which springs from a cool brain as well as a hot heart, and it is from the men who possess this rare quality that great warriors arise. Such feats as those performed by Major Hunter-Weston are of more service to the country than any degree of mere valour untempered by judgment."

A War Correspondent of the "Times," during the South African War, wrote the following account, in June, 1900, of Major Hunter-Weston's successful enterprise north of Bloemfontein, the first of the above-mentioned raids:

"Brevet-Major Aylmer Hunter-Weston's successful raid on the enemy's railway communications north of Bloemfontein furnishes a brilliant episode in the Campaign. It was an operation which led to far-reaching results, and admirably illustrates the advantage of having efficiently trained Mounted Engineers with the Cavalry. This officer had already distinguished himself by deeds of gallantry in General French's operations near Colesberg, at Riet Drift on the Modder River, during the advance of the Cavalry to relieve Kimberley, and at Paardeberg. In the late afternoon of the 12th March, 1900, the advanced troops of the Cavalry Division, under Lieut.-General French, following up the victory of Abraham's Kraal, were held up by a strong Boer force on the low hills south of Bloemfontein and north of Ferreira Spruit. The action was pressed vigorously till after nightfall, but without success. A feature of this action was the use made of pom-poms, or automatic guns, firing one-inch shells. These pom-poms are a new development of the artillery art. They did not have any great material effect, but the moral effect of this stream of little shells was considerable on those near the line of fire. To a Correspondent, like myself, well removed from their sphere of influence, the principal impression created was admiration for this novel form of fireworks in the growing darkness. The position held by the Boers was one of considerable strength, and the Cavalry were unable to drive them in or to reach Bloemfontein, which it was of importance to attain, not only for the moral effect of its capture, but from the fact that unless the locomotives and rolling stock at that railway centre could be captured it would be difficult for Lord Roberts to feed his force. With great boldness and true strategic conception, Lord Roberts had cut himself adrift from the Kimberley Railway, and had effected his movement north-east towards Bloemfontein, trusting to be able to establish a good line of communication, with his Base at Cape Town, by the Orange River-Bloemfontein Railway. As, however, our troops in that part of Cape Colony had been unsuccessful in preventing the Boers from blowing up the big railway bridge over the Orange River, it was impossible to get trucks or locomotives from Cape Colony into the Orange Free State until such time as the lengthy business of making a diversion and a new bridge had been completed. In the meanwhile the British Forces at Bloemfontein were dependent for their supplies on such locomotives and trucks as they could capture in the Free State, the bullock transport available being insufficient to feed so large a force at such a distance from the railhead at the other side of the Orange River. Brevet-Major Aylmer Hunter-Weston, who was on General French's Staff as Commander of the Mounted Engineers, recognizing the importance of the capture of this rolling stock, begged General French to allow him to make an attempt to break through the Boer line and to blow up the railway line north of Bloemfontein. This the Cavalry Commander at first refused, for he considered that the enterprise was an impossible one, and could only lead to the death of the Officer Commanding the Mounted Engineers, without any corresponding advantages. After nightfall, however, Major Hunter-Weston again reiterated his request, pointing out that the enterprise was a possible one under cover of darkness, if led by a man, who, like himself, had had experience of scouting and of deer-stalking. Having found it impossible to break the Boer line with the force he had immediately available, and knowing well the great importance of the object to be attained, General French, at 8.30 p.m., gave permission for an attempt to be made. Brevet-Major Aylmer Hunter-Weston, having received the desired authority, proceeded forthwith from the Cavalry Divisional Headquarters to the Royal Engineer Field Troops' Lines, to select from the men and horses of the Mounted Engineers and attached Cavalry Pioneers one officer and seven N.C.O.'s and men to accompany him in the operation. Two local men who could talk the 'Taal' fluently were also selected to accompany the expedition. The eleven forming this forlorn hope were mounted on the best horses that could be obtained from the whole of the Cavalry and Royal Engineers' horses in or near the Field Troop camp. Each man had the general plan and his particular rôle carefully explained to him, so that each might be able to carry on independently if his superiors became casualties. The party consisted of Brevet Major Aylmer Hunter-Weston, R.E.; Lieut. J. R. E. Charles, R.E; Sergt Engleheart, Pioneer-Sergt., 10th Hussars; Corpl. Kirby, Royal Engineers, three other specially selected Royal Engineers; two other specially selected Cavalry Pioneers, and two local guides. The expedition was carefully equipped with the necessary tools and gun-cotton, and took with them two spare horses to allow for casualties among their mounts. Starting at 1 a.m. (midnight), on the 13th of March, led by Major Aylmer Hunter-Weston, the party moved off in a north-north-easterly direction, keeping well to the east of Bloemfontein, the lights of which could from time to time be discerned away to their left. The night was dark, and the ground traversed was rough and broken. Great care had to be taken by the leader to move along valleys where there was no chance of his party showing against the sky-line. The task of getting through the Boer outpost line was no easy one, for the Boers are well-trained veldt men, whose sight and hearing are keen. The local knowledge of the guides was found not to stand the test of night work, and as guides they proved of but little use under conditions so different to those to which they were accustomed. Their knowledge of the language, however, was invaluable, for the leader had arranged that, in case his party came across any of the enemy, the guides should immediately challenge them, and should pretend that the Raiders were a party of 'Zarps,' as the 'Zuid Afrikanshes Republiks Polizei' (South African Republic Police) are generally called. The Zarps are disciplined, are clothed in drab uniforms, and are therefore something like our men. By careful guiding, the enemy's outpost line and support line were successfully passed, though on one occasion the Raiders were very nearly discovered by a patrol. When, however, they had got safely through the outpost line, and were well east of Bloemfontein, north of the Thaba Nchu Road and the partially constructed Ladybrand–Wepener Railway, a small Boer party ran into the group, and the value of the arrangement above described was proved. The guide immediately challenged them in Dutch, and, pretending that the party was a Zarp Patrol, he ordered the burghers back to their commando, threatening them with severe penalties for their irregularity in being away from their commando at night! The distance traversed in order to avoid the vicinity of Bloemfontein and the main body of the enemy was in truth considerable, but in the darkness, and with the many perpendicular-sided river beds to cross, the journey seemed to the devoted band of Raiders to be interminable, and they could not but feel anxious as to whether it would be possible to reach the railway line before the kindly cloak of darkness, which hid them from their enemy's eyes, was dispersed by daylight. However, the longest journey has its end, and the railway line was reached north-east of Rustfontein at 4.20 a.m. One of the horses had broken down from fatigue, but the rest of the little party had successfully reached their goal. On arrival at the railway line, each man proceeded to the duty that had been allotted to him; the leader and Lieut. Charles proceeding outwards along the railway to seek for a culvert, the destruction of which would put the railway out of action for some time; some men prepared the charges; some cut the telegraph line, and yet others went out as scouts, while the two guides held the horses of the party. The leader was successful in discovering a big culvert, spanned by iron girders. These girders were soon prepared for demolition by placing gun-cotton round them at each end. When all was ready the party was sent away, and the two officers remained to light the fuses. As soon as the duplicate fuses for each charge had been lit, the officers got away as quickly as possible. It need hardly be said, however, that to get away quickly in the dark over such rough ground was not easy, and both officers had heavy falls while getting back to their horses. To fall at such a time is far from pleasant, when it is remembered that the fuse was burning all the time, and that at any moment the charge might go off. However, they reached their horses safely, and just before daybreak the charges exploded, sending pieces of iron hurling over great distances through the air. Two of these pieces went through the hut of some Kaffirs nearly one hundred yards from the scene of the explosion. These Kaffirs, who had heard and seen nothing of the Raiders, were suddenly awakened by this, to them, terrible explosion, followed immediately by the whizz of iron fragments through the hut. Thinking that the end of the world had come, the Kaffirs en bloc took to their heels and ran away to the mountains, where it was afterwards discovered they remained for some three days in a state of great terror. The explosions, which were completely successful in demolishing the railway bridge, had more important results than frightening the Kaffirs. They were heard by General French, who, knowing his man, immediately reported by field telegraph to Lord Roberts that the raid had been successful and that the line was cut. The Boers in Bloemfontein, hearing these loud explosions far behind and to the north of them, thought they were surrounded and were severely shaken in moral. The railway officials, who were getting away the locomotives and rolling stock as rapidly as they could from Bloemfontein to the north, to prevent them falling into our hands, were prevented from getting any more stuff away, and thus the great object of the raid was accomplished. As far as regards the immediate fortunes of the Raiders, the explosions had an effect that was far from pleasant, for they gave the alarm to the Boer troops in these parts, and as day broke the fate of the little party, trying to get back to the British forces from a situation so many miles away behind the Boer lines, became more and more precarious. Both they and their horses were very tired, and the country to be traversed was badly cut up with perpendicular-sided nullahs, or water-courses, up and down which it was difficult to get a path to lead horses. As the little party rode off to the east to circumvent the main body of the enemy lying to the south, the leader espied a strong Boer piquet in one of these nullahs right in front of them. The situation was a desperate one. To avoid the piquet by moving to either flank was impossible, for during their movement to a flank they would have afforded easy targets to the Boer rifles at that short range. The Boers on the far side of the nullah were perfectly safe from any mounted attack if only they kept their heads; but the leader, knowing the value of decided action, and the great moral effect of a mounted charge, gave to his men the stirring command, 'Charge.' Cheering as they did so, the party galloped after him. On arrival at the nullah, the leader, Major Hunter-Weston, cheering, jumped straight into it. As is almost always the case in war, boldness succeeded, and the Boers, quitting the security of their positions on the other side of the nullah, ran away down the bottom of the nullah at their very best speed, without leaving anyone behind to fire on the raiders, or to take advantage of the easy target that they and their horses presented. Elated by this success, the little party pressed forward on its way home; but soon Boers appeared on either flank behind them, and fire was opened on them both by long range rifle fire and later by field guns. In descending into the last of the nullahs one horse got shot, and one man, Sapper Webb, got wounded. In order to save this man and to safeguard the retreat of the party, Major Hunter-Weston, retaining Sergt. Engleheart with him, sent on the remainder of the party, under Lieut. Charles, to take up a position on the line of low kopjes about a mile further on, while he himself, with Sergt. Engleheart, got the wounded man on to a horse, which was led on by Sergt. Engleheart while the other acted as a rearguard, and, firing from time to time, checked the advancing Boers. The fire brought to bear upon this little party was fortunately erratic, and neither the men of Lieut. Charles' party, nor the detachment with the wounded man, were hit either by rifle or shell fire, though the latter detachment, encumbered as they were by the wounded man, had many narrow escapes. As soon as the Boers came under the fire of the party established on the line of kopjes, and the rear detachment had passed through the line behind the hills, the Boers gave up the pursuit, and the Raiders, covered by a small rearguard, were able to make their way back by a very wide detour to the east and then south and south-west to the British lines, where they were received by the advanced scouts of the 2nd Cavalry Brigade, which was then advancing north to sweep round the east of Bloemfontein. The Raiders reached Cavalry Division Headquarters shortly before midday, and were in time to take part in the historic ceremony of the surrender of Bloemfontein that afternoon. The result of this excellently executed and most successful raid was that 25 locomotives and 108 trucks, 50 of which were loaded with coal, fell into our hands. It transpired that the Boers had been getting their accumulation of rolling stock away from Bloemfontein as quickly as time would allow, and that if the line had not been cut all would have been cleared by the morning. The smashing of the line not only prevented this rolling stock from being evacuated, but the news of it, telegraphed north, prevented Joubert from bringing to Bloemfontein the trains of reinforcements that were on their way. It had, furthermore, a great effect on the Boer troops holding Bloemfontein, for the noise of the explosion in their rear, and the absurdly exaggerated reports as to the strength of the raiders, made them believe that a strong cavalry force with artillery was across their line of retreat. The effect of this news was to convert the previous orderly retirement of our enemy into a rout, and to cause such a panic that no further defence of the hills south of Bloemfontein was attempted. Immediately after the surrender of Bloemfontein, the Mounted Engineers, under Major Aylmer Hunter-Weston, went forward to the railway station, and, taking over control of the railways, were able, with the aid of those of the railway staff who were of British sympathies and had remained, to organize, with the captured rolling stock, that same night a train service from Bloemfontein to the south. The Mounted Engineers continued to work this line until the arrival of the regular British Railway Staff some days later. It was due to this captured rolling stock that we were able to send troops down south to clear the railway line, and to get the much needed supplies up from the Orange River to our troops near Bloemfontein. For their services in this raid, Sergt. Engleheart was given the Victoria Cross; Lieut. Charles was given the Distinguished Service Order, and every man of the party was given the D.C.M.; Major Hunter-Weston himself receiving the special thanks of Lord Roberts."

Of Brevet-Major Aylmer Hunter-Weston's second exploit the "Times" Correspondent gave the following description under his account dated 13 May, 1900, of the "Occupation of Kronstadt":

"When the Cavalry Division, under General French, arrived at the farm of Boshof, west-south-west of Kronstadt, on the night of 11 May, Major Hunter-Weston, commanding the Royal Engineers with the Cavalry Division, volunteered to attempt a raid on the railway communication north of Kronstadt, similar to the enterprise which he carried out so successfully on the night previous to the occupation of Bloemfontein. General French gave his sanction. Volunteers were called for, and again it had to be a matter of selection. Taking Mr. Burnham, the American scout, and Lieut. Charles, R.E., Major Hunter-Weston chose the following eight sappers: Corpls. C. Hyde and F. Kirby; Sappers J. Austin, C. Collins, T. Costin, J. Crisp, B. Fearnley and T. Pearce. As it was anticipated that it might be necessary to employ force to pass the raiding party through the enemy's outposts, General French placed under Major Hunter-Weston's command a composite squadron picked from the 1st Cavalry Brigade and officered by Capt. Yardley, Inniskilling Dragoons, and Lieut. Harrison, Scots Greys. Crossing the Bospoortspruit, the little column of desperate men moved north, parallel with the Valsch River. Major Hunter-Weston led the column, steering by the stars, and Burnham brought his extraordinary faculties of sight and hearing into use to prevent the party from running into any outlying patrol or piquet. About a mile north of the Modderspruit, Burnham discovered a patrol of four men moving across the front. As it was impossible for the column to avoid detection, Major Hunter-Weston determined to capture the group. The Cavalry divided and charged in upon both flanks. It was a wonderful scene. The thud of the galloping horses in the deep silence of night, the sabres flashing bare in the strong moonlight, the intense excitement of the moment. The party was captured and proved to be a Kaffir patrol, which had been sent out by a Boer piquet lying about a mile to the east. Having located this Boer piquet to the left, and having passed a strong Boer piquet on the right, Major Hunter-Weston judged that the outpost cordon was pierced. He, therefore, left Capt. Yardley, with the Cavalry, in observation of the Boers, with orders to return to camp as soon as the raiding party was clear. The little raiding party itself, now 11 strong, with two led horses, moved off north-east, taking advantage of the ground to avoid being seen. On a ridge near Fairfield, Burnham descried an enemy piquet. It was located at a junction of two long wire fences, as was so often the custom of the Boers on outpost. The situation is an excellent one, for wherever in their length the fences be climbed or cut the wire transmits the sound and the piquet at once becomes aware of the fact. To avoid the patrol, Major Hunter-Weston made a detour, but the patrol had seen the party, and the Boers were moving parallel with them and were collecting the vedettes along the line. To discover the Boers' movements, Burnham scouted out to them, while the remainder of the party lay quiet. He discovered that four men were going rapidly forward, evidently to lie in ambush at a small nek which lay in the line of the raiders' advance, while the others were trying to follow. To shake off this following, the party dived into the deep and wooded Dornspruit, giving the nek and the Boers a wide berth. On reconnoitring the ridge after arrival at the Dornspruit dam, they found that they had shaken off the Boers and that they were clear of the enemy. They then crossed the Damfontein Hills, from which position they could see the Boer camp fires extending in an almost unbroken line from Kronstadt to Honingspruit. The retreating force was encamped all along the railway line, and was interposed between the raiders and their objective. As it was impossible to get right round behind the enemy, Major Hunter-Weston decided to try to slip through the Boer camps to the railway. But to do this the horses had to be concealed. Burnham went forward and found a spruit in which it would have been possible to have hidden the horses. But just as the party arrived at the edge of the depression a Boer camp fire flared up and showed them a number of Boers camped in the spruit. Time was now getting short; there was only half an hour of moonlight and an hour of darkness left before dawn. Retiring west from the spruit, they passed by a farm full of Boers, and moving through their hobbled horses, finally got within sight of the low railway embankment. Between them and the railway, however, ran the main road from Kronstadt to Pretoria, and along this road the Boer commandos were retiring all night. As the raiders approached the road the head of a large commando of mounted Boers turned up over a fold in the veldt. Thanks to Burnham, the Boers were seen before they made the British out. Major Hunter-Weston at once gave the preconcerted signal for everyone to lie flat upon their horses' necks. As the commando passed, the leading file challenged. For a moment it seemed that they must be discovered, and that it would be necessary to give the other preconcerted signal for the little party to break up, and, as individuals, make a bid for safety by galloping off in different directions. But as no movement was seen and no sound heard, the Boers apparently mistook the group for a bunch of loose horses, and passed on. It was a moment of extreme suspense; a moment when you hear each beat of your heart, and the relief was intense when the serried ranks of burghers passed on, laughing and joking, into the darkness. When the commando had passed the raiders moved on again to a place further away from the line, where the horses and the majority of the party were left concealed under Lieut. Charles, while Major Hunter-Weston, accompanied by Burnham, went forward to blow up the railway line at a point that proved to be near Amerika Siding. The leader had just left the rest of the party, and was giving Lieut. Charles some last instructions, when three Boers, who were sleeping in the field, suddenly sprang up out of the grass. Hunter-West and Burnham each immediately 'covered' a man with their revolvers, and Lieut. Charles with great promptitude seized the carbine of the third. They proved to be three scouts of the Afrikander Horse. They were left with Lieut. Charles and the sappers, while Major Hunter-Weston and Burnham went forward alone on foot to attempt the demolition. Almost at once they met a piquet in search of the prisoners. Avoiding these by lying flat on the ground, they waited until they heard the men move on before again going forward. The Boers disappeared, accusing the patrol of deserting its post. Boers were all round, but the two desperate men crawled to the road. Here they lay in the grass, and waited while another long commando passed. Then came some wagons, and then a break in the column. In this gap behind the last wagon, and under cover of the dust and noise, both crossed the road in safety, crawled through the wire fence between the road and the railway, and, choosing their time during the intervals between bodies of troops, they were able to crawl to the top of the embankment and lay themselves flat in the angle between the top of the earthwork of the embankment and the side of the ballast of the permanent way. Burnham, being one of the greatest scouts in the world, and Hunter-Weston a practised stalker, they were able, with the ballast as a background, to lie unnoticed within ten yards of the Boer commandos passing along the road, while Hunter-Weston attached the charges to the rail and made them ready for lighting. When the charges were fixed and the detonators in position, they waited until Burnham's practised ear told him that an interval in the continuous stream of troops and wagons was approaching. Hunter-Weston then, under cover of Burnham's broad-brimmed hat, lit the fuses, and they both slipped off down the little embankment, through the fence and across the road, behind the last of one lot of wagons and before the head of the next commando of Burghers arrived. Then at 4.15 a.m. came the explosion. It was followed by a babel of noise from the waking men, scared cattle, and a rush 'to horse.' It was a regular swarming of bees. Under cover of this tumult Major Hunter-Weston and Burnham reached the horses, and, mounting the prisoners on the led horses, the whole party moved off north-west in the grey light of approaching daybreak. As soon as the leader considered that they were clear of the surrounding Boers, he increased the pace, and they trotted steadily on for three miles up and over the low range they had crossed further north on their outward journey. At sunrise they were clear of the main body, but they had yet to get through the outposts. And as they dropped down into the valley, shortly after sunrise, they made out a piquet of some twenty Boers directly in their path. Fortunately these Boers were dismounted and engaged in catching their horses. One man only remained by the fire as a sentry over the arms. Immediate attack was the only possible salvation, and the leader, ordering a charge, headed the best attempt that the horses could do towards a gallop. The sentry levelled his rifle at the leader, but the sight of the charging horse and man made his courage fail, his hand shook, and the shot went wide. He then threw up his hands to save his own life. The leader, flinging himself from his horse, seized the man's rifle, and, to render it and the six other rifles lying there useless, he broke their stocks. There was no time to wait, for the Boers far outnumbered the raiders, and the raiders were encumbered by the three prisoners they had taken, two of whom were mounted on one horse. The order, therefore, was at once given to press on, and to get over the next ridge before the Boers could collect themselves and their horses, and, in turn, attack. For some little time the Burghers were dumbfounded, and were intent only on saving themselves and on catching their horses, which had as usual been allowed to graze during the night. These minutes of confusion were the saving of our party, for it enabled them to make good progress towards the ridge, and before the Boers had collected, had mounted and had begun to follow, the raiders were cresting the rise. By their fire they wounded one of the raiders, Sapper Collins, and, seeing that it would be necessary to check this Boer piquet (now left with some twelve rifles) Major Hunter-Weston ordered everyone to move on under the command of Lieut. Charles, while he himself remained behind to cover the retreat. Dismounting behind the ridge, he took up a concealed position, and opened rapid fire on the advancing Boers with one of the Mauser carbines captured from the prisoners taken near the railway. Providence aided him, for his first shot killed the leading man, and the rest of the piquet immediately threw themselves from their horses and began firing at the unseen enemy on the ridge. Seeing that the pursuit was checked, the Major, after discharging some more rounds from different positions, so as to give the impression that the ridge was held in strength, mounted his horse and rode on to rejoin his party. Rearguards were dropped on each vantage ground to secure themselves against pursuit, but nothing was seen of that piquet. The journey back with tired men leading tired horses, and with three prisoners to guard, was long and wearisome, and the vigilance of the leaders could never be relaxed, for they were still within the territory covered by the Boer patrols. At length they got back to country where they judged they should be clear of the Boers, but what was their discomfiture to espy in the distance in front of them a mounted force of Boers. The raiders tried to avoid being seen by this force, but it was evident that the advanced scouts had discovered them, and a pretty little bit of manœuvring ensued, neither party knowing the strength nor disposition of the other, and each keeping hidden from his opponent. By good fortune, before fire was opened, the raiders got a view of some of their opponents and discovered that they were British! But danger was not yet over, for the raiders had either slouch hats or bare heads, and it was difficult to make it clear that the returning raiders were in sooth British. As soon, however, as junction was effected with this Cavalry Squadron, the difficulties and dangers of the raiders were over, and, after watering and feeding and resting for a short time at a farmhouse, the gallant little cortège, with its three prisoners, returned quietly, reaching Cavalry Division Headquarters Camp, three miles north of Kronstadt, at 3 p.m, having accomplished an expedition which, in its sequence of miraculous escapes, reads more like a fairy tale than a stern episode of war, and which presents one of the most stirring, gallant and self-sacrificing side-histories of this war."

Colonel Watkins Yardley, D.S.O., in his delightful book, "With the Inniskilling Dragoons in South Africa," gives an account of his adventures when he went out to escort Major Hunter-Weston, as described at the beginning of this account. He ends his narrative by saying:

"One of our squadrons was detailed to reconnoitre at daylight for the enemy in the direction of our previous night's expedition. They espied Major Hunter-Weston's small party attempting to return, and pursued them, thinking that they were Boers. Major Hunter-Weston similarly mistook them for Boers, and tried to avoid them; so much delay arose before each discovered the error. My squadron was first detailed for this duty, and it would have been strange if, after escorting them out, I had been hunting them when returning. But in this vast country, where the air is so clear, figures can be seen at great distances, and you are within range of rifle fire ere it can be decided whether it is that of friend or foe."

The following extract gives an account of Brevet-Major Aylmer Hunter-Weston's third raid:

"On the 17th May, 1900, while still at Kronstadt, Brevet-Major Aylmer Hunter-Weston, realizing the importance of interrupting the Boers' railway communications, and seeing the futility, under the existing conditions, of trying to cut the railway line close behind the Boers, where its effect could be but slight, begged to be allowed to go right forward over the Vaal River and to break the line, many days' march ahead, near the big railway depôt at Johannesburg. If he had been successful in blowing up the line near this great centre of the Boer railway system, and, lying up for some days in the neighbourhood, had been able to continue to keep it cut, he would have upset the whole of the Boer railway communications. Lord Roberts, to whom the matter was referred, decided that the chance of success of so distant an enterprise was not worth the almost certain death of so valuable an officer, for even if the raid were successful the chance of the raider being able to return was very slight. On 22 May, however, when the Cavalry had done two days' march forward to Welgelegen, near the junction of the Rhenoster River and Honingspruit, Lord Roberts decided to allow Hunter-Weston to try and cut the line at some point within a night's ride, though he still refused to allow him to attempt the forlorn hope of trying to cut the line north of Johannesburg. He therefore sent a telegram to General French to say that if Major Hunter-Weston were to cut the line so as to prevent the Boers getting away their guns he would be performing a signal service to the State. Armed with this permission, Brevet-Major Aylmer Hunter-Weston set about selecting the best hundred men and 120 horses from the 1st Cavalry Brigade. Escorted by this squadron, under the command of Major Scobell, of the Scots Greys, Hunter-Weston, accompanied by Lieut. Earle, R.E., by two scouts and a black shepherd, left the Cavalry Division at Engelschekuil, and proceeded with the squadron to Bloemhof, which place they reached at sunset. From Bloemhof the squadron returned to rejoin the Cavalry Division, while Major Hunter-Weston, with his little party of four, went on through the night to try and blow up the big railway bridge at Grootvlei. After a long and very difficult journey, steered by Hunter-Weston by the aid of the stars, the raiders hit off the bridge exactly, but found that the enemy were camped in strength around the bridge. Major Hunter-Weston and one man, leaving the remainder with the horses, crept through the Boer camps and got up to the bridge, but only to find that the Boers themselves had already destroyed it. With great difficulty they got back, through the Boers to the rest of their party, and with them, at 2 a.m., slipped away through the darkness. By careful leading they were able to avoid the Boer piquets on the return, as on the outward journey, and, passing Shepstone at 8 a.m., they reported their arrival to General French at Essenbosch at 9.30 a.m., after a very long and difficult journey, practically all of which had to be carried out on foot, so as to save the horses for carrying the explosives and for an emergency."

With the exception of cutting the railway at Roodepoort on the 30th May—a small and comparatively easy affair—the next important raid carried out by Brevet-Major Hunter-Weston was that described below by a war correspondent:

"At the beginning of June the British Army was in and about Johannesburg, the Boers at that time holding the hills south of Pretoria, with outposts pushed well out towards Johannesburg. It was known that the Boers had at Pretoria a large amount of coal and of railway rolling stock, including engines and trucks, all of which were badly needed. Furthermore, in and about Pretoria there were known to be some 4,000 Britisb prisoners, whom the enemy intended to move east, down the Delagoa Bay Railway into the low and unhealthy country near Barberton and Koomatipoort. To prevent this great danger to the health and lives of our prisoners, and to capture the much-needed coal and rolling stock, the Commander-in-Chief decided to entrust to Brevet-Major Aylmer Hunter-Weston the task of cutting some big bridge on the railway from Pretoria to Delagoa Bay. The difficulties of such an enterprise, in view of the distance from Johannesburg to this railway, and in view of the large numbers of Boers now collected in the vicinity of Pretoria and Johannesburg, were obvious, but Hunter-Weston had overcome even greater difficulties in his former raids, and the value to the prisoners was such as to justify the taking of big risks. On 1 June, therefore, Lord Roberts sent for Major Hunter-Weston to come to his Army Headquarters at Orange Grove Hotel, near Johannesburg, where Lord Kitchener, his Chief of the Staff, explained the situation, placed the famous scout Burnham at his disposal, and gave him authority to take with him the best two hundred men and horses that the 3rd Cavalry Brigade could produce, to help him on his way to the big bridge at Bronkerspruit, or such other railway bridge on the Delagoa Bay Railway as he could get in at. These orders were given to him at about 4.30 p.m., and by 8.30 p.m. Major Hunter-Weston had started from the Dynamite Works with Burnham, Corpl. Kirby, and three other selected Sappers, escorted by 200 men and 220 horses of the 9th, 16th and 17th Lancers. The Boers had many outposts out, and it needed both skill and good fortune to elude them. Fortunately the skill in leading was provided both by Major Hunter-Weston, who had done so much raiding, and to whom night work and guiding by the stars apparently presented no difficulties, and by Burnham, the great American scout. Fred Burnham, who was afterwards both made a Major in the British Service and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order, is a man of whalebone and iron, with a very alert and intelligent brain, and with highly trained senses of sight, hearing and smell—senses which he had cultivated in his early days as a scout in the Red Indian Wars in North America. He is, perhaps, the most wonderful scout in the history of the world. Major Hunter-Weston could see in the dark much further than any ordinary man, but Burnham's powers of sight were out of all comparison better than his, and in the matter of hearing and smell all other white men were immeasurably his inferior. Even the natives could not compete with him in this respect. Twice in this night's ride he was able to make out the presence of a farm by his sense of smell, long before anyone else could either see or hear anything of them. At daybreak on June 2nd, some time before the sun rose, Burnham, who was then leading, descried a Boer scout ahead of him. He scouted up close to him with the intention of capturing him. In so doing he discovered that there were many other Boers close by him still wrapped in their blankets sleeping, and with their horses knee-haltered and grazing in a little depression beyond. He immediately returned to report this to the leader, and the latter at once sent a troop round to cut them off before they could get back and give the alarm to their main body. Unfortunately the Boers were able to elude this troop, and the enemy made good their escape. By this time, in the growing light, the smoke of many fires could be seen over the crest of a neighbouring rise. These extended for about half a mile, and about another half-mile beyond them again, near Bapfontein, the bivouac of another and much larger commando could be made out through glasses. The fires of this latter commando extended to a considerable distance, and it was evident that the party were in the presence of a strong assembly of Boers amounting to several thousand. In these circumstances, further advance was out of the question, and it only remained for the raiders to retire as rapidly and as gracefully as they could, for their chance of being able to avoid envelopment and capture by so large a body of the enemy with fresh horses was but small, having regard to the open nature of the country, and the fact that our men's mounts, which had started tired, had now been marching all night. However, the troops were drawn from three of the best of the British Cavalry Regiments, under good officers, and there ensued what an eye-witness of considerable military experience described as 'the prettiest rearguard action that it was possible to imagine.' The British, under Major Hunter-Weston, retired successively under cover of the fire of small rearguards and small flank guards, who pushed out wide on each flank to prevent the Boers from getting round and heading them off. This the Boers were constantly attempting to do, but the accurate long-range shooting of the flanking parties took such toll of the Boers that they never gained their object. When this running fight had continued successfully for some miles, and the leader saw that there was a good chance of the party being able to get back within range of our own troops, he despatched Burnham, who was mounted on a splendid little colonial pony, to take a message to the nearest British Cavalry Brigade to report the situation, and to request that some Cavalry and Horse Artillery might be sent out to a Kaffir kraal, west of Six-Mile Spruit, near which the ground afforded an excellent position for the raiders to hold. On arrival at this Kaffir kraal the raiders took up, with great skill, an extended and concealed position among the rocks, where they themselves and their horses were well hidden, and whence they could annihilate with fire any Boers that approached over the surrounding open country. The Boers, finding that their attempts to cut the British off had been unsuccessful, and disliking the appearance of the British position, and especially disliking the bullets that came with such frequency and accuracy from that position, gave up the game, and the little British force had the satisfaction of watching their enemies retire crestfallen to their distant camp, from rest in which they had been so unceremoniously disturbed before sunrise. As soon as our scouts, who had been sent out immediately the Boers were seen to retire, reported that the enemy had indeed disappeared, the party of raiders continued their journey back towards Johannesburg, and met, at about four miles from their camp, the force of cavalry and guns that General Dickson had sent out to extricate them from what would have been a very awkward predicament if it had not been for the skill in leading, and the courage, high training and good shooting of the troops. Thus ended, with only 16 casualties, an episode which, in less skilful hands, might have resulted in a gain to the Boers of over 200 good horses and good rifles, and of captivity, and its attendant discomforts, to some of the very flower of our troops." For his exceptional gallantry among this goodly company of gallant men, Corpl. Kirby, Royal Engineers, was awarded the much coveted distinction of the Victoria Cross, the second V.C. awarded to men who had taken part in raids with Brevet-Major Aylmer Hunter-Weston. For his services in command of these raids he was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Aylmer Hunter-Weston, Brevet-Major, Royal Engineers. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." For his further services in the South African War, Brevet-Major Aylmer Hunter-Weston was mentioned in Despatches; received the Queen's Medal with seven clasps, and was given the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel. After the South African War, Brevet Lieut.-Colonel Aylmer Hunter-Weston commanded a Field Company, Royal Engineers, at Shorncliffe till 1904, when he was made D.A.A.G., 4th Army Corps in London. He was transferred to the General Staff on its inception, and served on the General Staff in the Eastern Command from 1904–1908; in the Scottish Command, 1908–11; and as Assistant Director of Military Training, General Staff, War Office, 1911–14. In Feb. 1914, he was promoted to Brigadier-General, and given the command of the 11th Infantry Brigade at Colchester. On the outbreak of War, Aug. 1914, he took the 11th Infantry Brigade of the 4th Division to France and took part in the Great Retreat, and in all the battles in France and Flanders up till Feb. 1915, when he was sent home to command the 29th Division (Despatches four times; promoted Major-General for distinguished service in the field). Major-General Aylmer Hunter-Weston left England with the 29th Division in March, 1915, and commanded it at the landing at Cape Helles, Dardanelles, on 25 April, and in the subsequent operations on the Gallipoli Peninsula. He was promoted temporary Lieutenant-General on 24 May, 1915, and commanded the 8th Army Corps at the Dardanelles, and subsequently in France till the conclusion of hostilities, when he was promoted Lieutenant-General "for distinguished service in the field." He was created a K.C.B. on 11 Aug. 1915. Sir Aylmer Hunter-Weston of Hunterston was elected M.P. for his county (North Ayrshire) as Coalition candidate in Oct. 1916, on the nomination of all parties, Unionist, Liberal and Labour, while he was at the front in command of his Army Corps. He was re-elected with an enormous majority in Dec. 1918. On the 24th Jan. 1918, in support of the Military Service Bill, Lieut.-General Sir Aylmer Hunter-Weston, in a maiden speech, said: "It is with great diffidence that I rise to make my first speech in this House. I am a plain, blunt soldier, more accustomed to the ways of war than the eloquence of Parliament. But from the fullness of the heart the mouth speaketh, and the question of man-power, with which this Bill is concerned, is of such vital importance to us, who are fighting your battles at the front, that, as a serving soldier at present commanding an Army Corps in Flanders, I cannot refrain from giving you the thoughts and feelings of my comrades of all ranks at the front. I speak not as a General only. Among the many true friends and trusty comrades I have among those who are risking their lives, and more than their lives, none are truer or more valued by me than my friends and comrades in the ranks. And it is as one who has had the privilege of sharing with his men danger, sickness and privation that I venture to speak haltingly and feebly, but from a full heart, in their name to-night. Our Army, your Army, the flower of the manhood of these islands, and of the great self-governing Dominions across the seas, is in magnificent fettle, full of courage and confidence and unconquerable cheeriness, imbued with a magnificent spirit of self-sacrifice and devotion to duty, determined to 'stick it out' doggedly when it is a question of defence, and ready to strike, and strike hard, when the time comes for attack or counter-attack. But we need men, and, above all, we need the confidence and co-operation of the nation. We need that every man and woman at home, and everyone in the army abroad, should have confidence in each other, and that each and all should exert all their strength, physical, mental and moral, to help to win the war. Let there be no mistake. We are fighting for our national existence; we are fighting for our lives, and for the lives and honour of our women and children. If we do not now beat Germany and make her people feel that militarism does not pay, she will attack us again when we have not so many Allies, and if she does, and if she wins, she will do to us all and more than all that she has done to Serbia, to Belgium, and to Northern France—she will destroy us utterly. She has chastised the small nations with whips. If she were to succeed in a second campaign against us she would chastise us with scorpions. Germany is waging war not for military supremacy only, but also for commercial supremacy, and to attain this commercial supremacy she undoubtedly desires to destroy the productivity of the working classes of the United Kingdom. I am no believer in distinction of classes. We as a nation stand or fall together, and what affects one part of the nation affects all; but undoubtedly those who would suffer most by a German victory would be the workers, the producers in this country. See how Germany has removed all machinery from Belgium and Northern France. See how she has forced the workmen of Belgium to work as quasi-slaves for German taskmasters. See how she has torn the young women of Northern France from their homes, and sent them to a fate their parents know not what. It is the working men and women of the conquered territories that have suffered most at German hands. I hope that Hon. Members will make this great fact known to the people of this country. If she got the chance she would do the same by us. She would destroy our factories and ship-building yards, remove our machinery, injure our wharves and harbours, and, by thus destroying our means of production, would leave our people to starve. To realize what a fate you would lay up for your children and for your old age, if you leave Germany free to attack us at her pleasure, come and see the reconquered territory; that land of desolation, of destruction, and of death. Of German atrocities you have incontrovertible evidence in the Report of Lord Bryce's Commission, but as the spoken word is worth a wilderness of paper, I will ask you to pardon me if I give you an example from my own experience. My advanced troops had entered a certain town in Northern France, from which they had driven the Germans. The women of the town came to us scattering flowers and greeting us with cries of 'Nous sommes sauvées!' A sturdy peasant woman of France cried to me, as commander of the advanced guard, to press on my already quick-moving troops to 'Kill, kill, kill!' the retreating fiends who had raped her daughter publicly before her very eyes. Can you wonder, then, that I appeal, through you, to the men and women of Great Britain and Ireland to support the Government in their determination to give the Army the young men it needs to carry this war through to victory? Objection has been taken that there are still many men capable of being combed out in France. If steps were not being taken to comb out in France at the same time as in England, I think this would be a fair and valid criticism. From my own experience and knowledge, however, and I speak, I may say, from the standpoint of one who is sufficiently high in the scale to be able to get a general view, while not so high up that I am in any way responsible either for policy or for strategy, I know that within recent times the harrow has been passed over the men behind the line in France, and with very considerable success. Now again the process of combing out is being gone through, not with a harrow, but with a small tooth comb. The exceeding bitter cry of the so-called indispensable is going up from works and offices in France, as at home. But it is being ruthlessly disregarded out there in the case of the really young men who cannot truly be called indispensable anywhere but in the front line. There young men are indispensable. But when every man has been combed out in France, and when as many as possible have been replaced by women of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps—and in this connection I may say that the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps are doing a most admirable work, and we soldiers owe and pay a great tribute of admiration and gratitude to these women for what they are doing—I say that when every man has been combed out, and when every man has been replaced by a woman, there will still be need, and urgent need, for young men from this country. Objection has furthermore been made that sufficient use has not been made of the best brains, and that there is a prejudice against the Territorials and the New Army men. Nothing could be further from the truth. When men are fighting for their lives and honour, as we are out there, they do their utmost to get hold of the men who will help them best. They do not ask whether an officer was a Territorial, a Regular, or a New Army man in the past when choosing an assistant for the present. They ask who is the best man to be got now. We want to get the best assistance to help us to win the war. A man at the front is taken for what he is, and not for what he was. The Army does not resent criticism, It welcomes it. It welcomes constructive and well-informed criticism, but destructive and ill-informed criticism is good for no portion of the nation at any time. It is especially bad in war, for it tends to reduce the moral and confidence not only of the Army but of the nation. There are many points which may justly be criticised. There are faults. But I may say, from what I have seen out there, that every man in authority is honestly, constantly, and earnestly doing his best to minimize those faults and to overcome them. Let us have co-operation and mutual confidence—soldiers and politicians, civilians and military, trusting each other and working hand-in-hand. Both are needed. We at the front feel that the Army is but the point of the spear, of which the shaft is ship-building and the many other industries necessary for the successful prosecution of the war; the driving-power being the determination of the nation as a whole to co-operate with us, to stick it out, and to drive the spear home to victory. What most strikes an observant but at the present time a somewhat infrequent visitor to England and Scotland is the immense amount of courage, resolution and self-sacrifice of the majority of the nation. But there is a minority whose selfishness, ignorance and self-complacency are but too apparent. And there are a noisy and vociferous few—some of whom are honest, though mistaken—who do infinite harm to our cause. May I, as a representative of those at the front, appeal to those who are selfish from ignorance of the facts of the situation, and to the honest though vociferous few, to do what they can to help us—by helping the cause of Victory by every means in their power? Amongst the soldiers serving at the front there is a very strong feeling of resentment against the young, able-bodied men who are staying at home in comfort and safety and drawing large pay, while better men than they are doing not only their own share in the mud, discomfort and danger of the trenches, but also the share that should be borne by these young 'stay-at-homes,' who claim privileges denied to the rest of the nation. This feeling of resentment is so strong that it will, I fear, last beyond the war. It may also—and this, I think, is an important point—cause a line of cleavage in the nation which will be very deplorable. But I defy any man with ordinary human feelings not to feel in sympathy with a gallant soldier when, speaking of these young 'stay-at-homes,' he says, with ill-concealed resentment and heat in his tone, that he and his mates who have 'done their bit' 'will take good care to get even with those blessed skulkers,' as he calls them, using another adjective! Those of us who have had the privilege of serving with Irishmen and Irish Regiments know the charm of that most lovable race, so unaccountable and difficult if badly led, so glorious in their heroism, so easily led to almost unbelievable flights of heroism, loyalty and devotion to duty, if only they are led by a strong, just, fearless man, who has courage—courage not only physical but moral, and who adds to that courage human sympathy allied with well-balanced judgment and iron inflexibility of will. Are we men of action at the front guilty of too great idealism, too great optimism, if we still hope that among the great men of Ireland there will arise such a leader, be he known or unknown now, who will cause Ireland to join America, France, and the great Dominions across the seas in fighting this great fight for liberty, justice and right? Through the poor agency, therefore, of the voice of one who has borne the burden of the war from the beginning, fighting alongside Irishmen and Irish Regiments, may I say that your brother Irishmen and their true comrades in the Allied Armies, who are fighting with them on the other side of the water, appeal to their comrades in Ireland who are young and who are still in Ireland, both North and South, to be true to the glorious traditions and history of Ireland, and to come in full strength to take their rightful place alongside us. The future of these islands, of the Empire, and of the world lies in the hands of the men who have fought and who are fighting. It is they who will undoubtedly mould and shape the world. The great majority out there have given up all voluntarily at the call of duty and have been fighting with the greatest devotion, gallantry and self-sacrifice. It is those qualities, that self-sacrifice, devotion and resolution which, applied hereafter, will have the effect, as I believe, in making these islands better and brighter places than ever they have been before. May I, through this House, appeal to every man who is under twenty-five, and who is, therefore, more indispensable in the front line than anywhere else, to come willingly to join the men in whose hands the future of this country lies, and with them safeguard the noble heritage which our forefathers have bequeathed to us. Above all, let the men of England realize that they are directly and personally responsible for the lives of their fellow-countrymen at the front if by any action of theirs or of their friends they restrict or retard in any way the necessary output of munitions of war, ships, aeroplanes, guns, ammunition—munitions of every kind. These are the necessities of the situation out there. Guns, aeroplanes, munitions are our life-savers. Without them our men suffer heavy casualties. With them, we can so deal with the enemy that our losses are reduced to a minimum. Therefore, I would beg them to remember that any interruption or cessation of work means wounds and death to the brave lads who are fighting for you. A local defeat by the enemy has often much less serious military consequences than the stoppage of work by our fellow-workers at home. It is only by the whole-hearted co-operation of the men and women at home with us who are fighting at the front that we can carry our cause to victory. In this, as in everything else, we require solidarity in the nation—between the nation, which is the Army at home, and the Army, which is the nation at the front. We need men. We specially need young men. We need men to hold and work and fight on our front line. We need men to continue working on our many defensive lines. We need men to continue to improve the communications, on which so enormous an amount of work has been done during this past year. Above all, we need men to train for offensive and counter-attack action, so that we may have strong, well-trained divisions with which to meet and defeat the enemy. In this connection it is necessary for us all to face the facts and to preserve our sense of perspective and proportion. From a review of the general military situation, we know that whatever the available force the enemy may bring against us on the Western Front there is no cause for despondency. The military situation is good, and when America comes in it will be overwhelming. But until America is able to make her full strength felt we must expect heavy fighting if the enemy choose to attack. We hope they will attack, for if they do attack we shall undoubtedly defeat them, and they will suffer very heavy losses. In the sway of battle, however, we are sure to suffer local and temporary reverses, and it would be well for the British public to face this fact. I say, therefore, to all: Have Courage, Confidence and Resolution! Do not fear to face facts. We are sure to have difficulties, both at home and at the front, but the difficulties of the future are as nothing to the difficulties we have surmounted in the past. Our position and resources are such that, if only the nation will stick it out, we are certain to win through. Germany is hard pressed. Her men are hungry and in distress. Her allies are in even a worse plight. We are in every respect better off than she is. But her Army is still intact. Her leaders understand the merit and necessity of resolution. It is on our resolution, our determination, and our grit that the immense issues of the future now depend. A great flood of liberty and justice has been surging against the great dam formed by the Prussian desire to attain a world domination based on might and long-prepared military force. To the superficial observer that dam still seems to stand fast. But under the dam a steady, if unseen, process of disintegration has been going on, and some day the dam of might will burst, and the great flood of right will carry all before it. If only the Empire will but to herself be true; if all individuals and classes in the nation, which is the Army at home, will co-operate loyally with each other and with the Army, which is the nation at the front, standing resolutely shoulder to shoulder, calmly, confidently, and courageously, we are certain of ultimate victory, and of the only peace which would be a lasting peace—the only peace which would not be treason to the heroes, your sons and brothers, who have passed before us over the Great Divide to safeguard our honour and the prosperity of our people, and to ensure the triumph of right, liberty and justice."—Mr. Herbert Samuel: "The House in every quarter will desire to express to the hon. and gallant Member its cordial congratulations upon the admirable speech which he has just delivered, and its thanks for the observations he has made. Forcible, eloquent, and vivid, the hon. and gallant Gentleman has admirably fulfilled the function which I may describe as liaison officer between the Army and Parliament. We can assure him that the same spirit of resolute determination which he breathed throughout his speech animates this House."

Lieut.-General Hunter-Weston married Grace (Lady of Grace of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, only daughter of the late William Strang Steel, of Philiphaugh, Selkirkshire, on 5 Dec. 1905.

He is 27th Laird of Hunterston and head of the ancient families both of Weston of Weston-under-Lizar, and of Hunter of Hunterston. He is J.P. and D.L. of Ayrshire; Knight of Justice of St. John of Jerusalem, of the English Priory of which Order his collateral ancestor Sir William Weston was Grand Prior on its suppression in England in the time of Henry VIII. He is Commandeur Légion d'Honneur, Grand Officer of the Belgian Crown, Member of the Medjidieh, D.S.O. and K.C.B.

ROBERTSON, JAMES, The Rev., was born 19 Aug. 1855, son of the late Robert Robertson, of Grantown-on-Spey, He was educated at Aberdeen and Edinburgh Universities, and joined the Army 18 April, 1884, as Chaplain to the Forces, 4th Class. He served during the operations of the Sudan Frontier Field Force in 1885, being present at the action of Kosheh during its investment, at the reconnaissance on the 16th Dec., and at the engagement of Giniss. He was mentioned in Despatches and received the Medal and the Khedive's Bronze Star. Mr. Robertson married, in 1887, Nellie (who died in 1911), daughter of the late Hugh Allan, J.P., of Glassaugh, County Banff. He became Chaplain to the Forces, 3rd Class, 21 Dec. 1896. He served in the South African War, 1899–1902, as Chaplain to the Highland Brigade, and took part in the advance on Kimberley, including the actions at Modder River and Magersfontein. POORE, ROBERT MONTAGU, Capt., was born at Carysfort House, near Dublin, 20 March, 1866, eldest son of Major Robert Poore, late 8th Hussars, and of Juliana Benita, daughter of Rear-Admiral Sir Armar Lowry Corry, K.C.B. He joined the Wiltshire Regt., as Lieutenant, from the Militia, 28 April, 1886; was transferred to the 7th Hussars, as Lieutenant, 13 Oct. 1886. He served in India from 1886 to 1895; was A.D.C. to H.E. the Governor of Bombay 24 Oct. 1892, to 17 Feb. 1895. He served in South Africa, 1895 to 1905, including the Matabele (1896) and Mashonaland (1897) Campaigns. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 18 Feb. 1898], and was given the Brevet of Major 20 May, 1898, having been promoted to Captain 1 July, 1896. He served in the South African War, 1899–1902, with the Military Mounted Police 9 Oct. to 12 Nov. 1899; as Provost-Marshal 13 Nov. 1899, to 7 July, 1902, being present at the operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900, including operations at Paardeberg (17 to 26 Feb.); actions at Poplar Grove, Dreifontein, Vet River (5 and 6 May) and Zand River; operations in the Transvaal in May and June, 1900, including actions near Johannesburg, Pretoria and Diamond Hill (11 and 12 June); operations in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, July to 29 Nov. 1900, including action at Belfast (26 and 27 Aug.); operations in the Transvaal 30 Nov. 1900, to 31 May, 1902. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 8 Feb. and 16 April, 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with six clasps; the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Robert Montagu Poore, Capt. and Brevet Major, 7th Hussars. In recognition of services during the recent operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the Duke of Cornwall and York 14 Aug. 1901. He became Major 17 July, 1901, and Lieutenant-Colonel 26 June, 1911. He commanded the 7th Hussars, 1911–15. He served in the European War from 1914; was promoted to Colonel 15 Dec. 1914, and Temporary Brigadier-General 14 Oct. 1915; commanded the Jhansi Brigade (India), 1915–19; was mentioned in Despatches, and created a C.I.E. in the Birthday Honours, 1918. He played cricket for the Bombay Presidency (India), 1892–95 and 1912–13, and for South Africa against Lord Hawke's English team during the winter of 1897–98, scoring two centuries. He was kept out of English first-class cricket till he was in his thirty-third year, owing to his regiment being on foreign service in India and South Africa. 1899 was his best year. He headed the season's batting in first-class matches, scoring 1,551 runs for 21 innings, his average working out to 91.23, which has never been equalled in first-class cricket for so large a number of runs. For Hampshire his average was 116.58. He scored seven centuries this season, three being successive ones, which included double centuries against Somerset, and his highest score was 304. A partnership with Capt. E. G. Wynyard produced 411 runs before they were parted. He played for the Gentlemen v. Players in 1899. He did not limit his activities to the game of cricket. He was one of the finest swordsmen in the Army, being Best Man-at-Arms (Mounted events) for four consecutive years in which he competed at the Royal Naval and Military Tournament (1898, 1899, 1906, 1907). He was a first-class polo player, and played "back" for his regimental team, taking part in several successful Inter-Regimental tournaments in India and finally in 1899 at Hurlingham. In 1899 he had a phenomenal fortnight, in which he played in the winning team (7th Hussars) in the Inter-Regimental Polo Tournament, when he hit the winning goal; was Best Man-at-Arms at the Royal Naval and Military Tournament, and scored three successive centuries for his county in first-class cricket. He has won several racquet, squash racquet and lawn tennis tournaments, and is a good shot both with the rifle and gun. He married, in 1898, Lady Flora Douglas-Hamilton, sister of the 13th Duke of Hamilton.

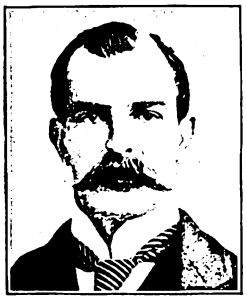
GLEICHEN, COUNT (later Lord Albert Edward Wilfred), Major-General, was born in London 15 Jan. 1863, son of Admiral Prince (and Princess) Victor of Hohenlohe-Langenburg. He was educated at Cheam, Charterhouse, and Sandhurst, and joined the Grenadier Guards, 1881. He served in the Guards' Camel Regt. in the Nile Expedition, 1884. Count Gleichen published "With the Camel Corps up the Nile": "One day in September, 1884, on coming off one of those numerous guards in Dublin that make the subaltern's life a burden to him, I found the joyful news awaiting me that I was to go out to the Sudan at once with the Camel Corps detachment of my battalion. As everybody knows, this sudden despatch of troops to the Nile was due to the Government having suddenly taken into its head the idea that it was necessary to rescue General Gordon from his perilous position at Khartoum, which he had held since the previous February. Better late than never! Accordingly an expedition was equipped to proceed up the river in pursuance of a determination which ought to have been carried out at least three months earlier. The idea had only recently been started that, in order to allow of troops acting with any success up the Nile, it was absolutely necessary that a certain proportion of them should be mounted on camels, both for facility of transport across the desert (if necessary) to Khartoum, and for rapidity of action. Accordingly a Camel Corps was organized, drawn half from the Cavalry and half from the Infantry. The Cavalry part was to be composed of detachments from all the Cavalry regiments in Great Britain—at the time subdivided into 'Heavies' and 'Lights'; the Infantry part of the detachments from the Brigade of Guards, and from the regiments already out in Egypt, these last to go by the name of (Camel) Mounted Infantry. They were as good men as could be got anywhere, and a finer ship-load than those on board the Deccan never left England. Mounting a frisky camel is exciting work for a beginner and nearly always results in a cropper. The mode of procedure should be thus: Having made your camel to kneel by clearing your throat loudly at him and tugging at his rope, shorten your rein till you bring his head round to his shoulder, put your foot in the stirrup to throw your leg over. With his head jammed like that, he cannot rise, and must wait until you give him his head. Unless you do as directed, he will get up before your leg is over; if this happens, stand up in the stirrup till he is up, and then throw your leg over, otherwise you will infallibly meet with a hideous catastrophe. A camel's leg will reach anywhere—over his head, round his chest, and on to his hump. He will chew the root of his tail, nip you in the calf, or lay the top of his head on his hump. To the uninitiated a camel going for one with his mouth open and gurgling horribly is a terrifying spectacle, but do not mind him, it is only his way. A camel is not intended by nature to be groomed, so do not groom him. You might as well groom an Irish pig. With infinite pains you beat the dust out of his skin, remove as many as possible of the ticks and maggots that infest him, wipe his nose (if he has a cold), and finish up by washing off any mud, and drying him with a wisp of dhurra stalk. What is the result? The moment your back is turned over he goes, and enjoys a delicious roll in the dust and dirt again, making himself filthier than before. The natives understand all this, and instead of cleaning him, and making him more susceptible to the heat of the sun, plaster him all over with mud during the hot months, which keeps the sun and flies off during the day, and maybe protects him from the cold at night." Count Gleichen lost his camel: "I made every inquiry afterwards about a big white camel with a blue and white nose-band, a vile temper, and a hole in his head big enough to put your helmet in. I never heard any more of him. Peace to his bones! Beyond Dongola, the G.C.R. had long ceased to be a camel regiment, and we were once more to be genuine infantry. It was very sad to compare our present state with what we were seven months before, going up country. Then each man had a camel of his own, real breeches and putties, and a respectable grey tunic. Now every man was reduced to his own legs as a transport, khaki trousers much too short for him, and a badly-fitting khaki tunic. Then the G.C.R. was over 400 strong, with every hope for the future; now the object for which we came was gone, and there were 90 of us gone also." He was promoted to Captain 21 Sept. 1892; was Equerry to the Prince of Wales, 12 Jan. to 11 Feb. 1892; Extra Equerry to the Queen 12 Feb. 1892, to 22 Jan. 1901; Staff Captain and D.A.A.G. (Intelligence), Headquarters of Army, 5 May, 1895, to 14 July, 1899. He served in the Expedition to Dongola, 1896, receiving the Medal and Egyptian Medal; accompanied the Rodd Mission to Abyssinia in 1897, and became Major 28 Oct. 1898. Count Gleichen served in the South African War from 1899 to 1900, first with the 3rd Battn. Grenadier Guards, in the Guards Brigade, and then as D.A.A.G., Transport, 20 Jan. to 22 Feb. 1900, taking part in the advance on Kimberley, including the actions at Belmont, Enslin and Modder River (severely wounded). He was with the 9th Division as Intelligence Officer 23 Feb. to 29 June, 1900, and was present in the operations in the Orange Free State, including those at Paardeberg, and the actions at Poplar Grove, Blaauweberg and Heilbron, and was Provost-Marshal under the Military Governor, Pretoria, 30 June to 19 Aug. 1900. Then he was I.O. to Eastern Line of Communications to 30 Nov. 1900. He was mentioned twice in Despatches [London Gazette, 26 Jan. 1900 and 8 Feb. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with five clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Albert Edward Wilfred, Count Gleichen, C.V.O., C.M.G., Major Grenadier Guards. In recognition of services during the recent operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the Sirdar 6 Nov. 1901. He was appointed an Extra Equerry to King Edward 23 July, 1901, and was employed with the Egyptian Army 7 Feb. 1901, to 14 Oct. 1903, as Director of Intelligence and Sudan Agent (Second Class Medjidie); was promoted to Lieut.-Colonel 14 Oct. 1903; was Military Attaché, Berlin, 15 Oct. 1903, to 27 Jan. 1906, and Military Attaché, Washington and Mexico, 28 Jan. 1906, to 29 Jan. 1907; was given the Brevet of Colonel 15 Oct. 1906; Assistant Director of Military Operations, War Office, 1 Feb. 1907, to 31 July, 1911; Extra Equerry to King George 10 June, 1910. He was Temporary Brigadier-General 1 Aug. 1911, to 1 March, 1915; commanded the 15th Brigade, Irish Command, and was in charge at Belfast during the Churchill meeting and other troubles. Count Gleichen served in the European War (as Brigade Commander 5 Aug. 1914, to 1 March, 1915), and took the brigade to France 14 Aug. 1914. He was present at the Battles of Mons and Le Cateau, at the Retreat from Mons, and the Battles of the Marne, Aisne, Festubert and Ypres. He was promoted to Major-General, "for distinguished service," 18 Feb. 1915, and appointed to train and command the 37th Division 6 April, 1915, taking it to France on 30 July, 1915. He assisted in the Great Push of 1 July, 1916. In 1917 he organized and directed the Intelligence Bureau, Department of Information, 1917–18, and was afterwards employed in the Ministry of Information. He was twice mentioned in Despatches. Lord Edward Gleichen has written several interesting and amusing books: "With the Camel Corps up the Nile" (1888); "Armies of Europe" (translation, 1890); "With the Mission to Menelik, 1897"; "The Doings of the 15th Brigade" (1917), etc., etc., and has compiled and edited the "Chronology of the War" (in three volumes). His favourite recreations are shooting and travelling. He married, in 1910, the Honourable Sylvia Edwardes (a Maid of Honour to Queen Alexandra), daughter of the Honourable Mrs. Henry Edwardes; and in 1917 he dropped his foreign title and became Lord Edward Gleichen. We give some extracts from "The Doings of the Fifteenth Infantry Brigade, Aug. 1914, to March, 1915, by its Commander": "In the neighbourhood of Pradelle we put up at a nice, bright, ugly little château belonging to an elderly lady, who was most civil, and told us stories of what the Germans had done when they passed through a week or two ago on their retreat eastwards. Amongst other abominations, they had, on arrival, demanded of the old curé the key of the church tower, on which they wished to put a Maxim. The old man, not having the key, had hobbled off to get it from the garde-champêtre, who happened to be in possession of it for the time being. He could not, however, find him, and the officer in command, being in a diabolical temper, put the poor old priest up against a wall and shot him dead on the spot. This was recounted by the curé's sister, and there was not a shadow of doubt on the matter, for it was confirmed by all. . . . These belonged to the Frankfort-am-Main Corps (VII.). I examined one prisoner, a regular 'Schwabe' from Heilbronn, a jolly man with a red beard, who told me that his company was commanded by a cavalry captain, who considered it beneath his dignity to charge with infantry, and remained snugly ensconced behind a wall whilst he shouted encouragement to his men." . . . At the Château of Beukenhorst (Ypres): "There were some late roses in the garden, or rather in the scattered flower-beds near the house, which lasted out even when the snow was on them; but about the only live beings who took any interest in them were three or four goats, who haunted the precincts of the Château and were everlastingly trying to get inside. Indeed, when Moulton-Barrett first came to take possession there were two goats in the best bedroom upstairs, who peered out of the windows at the undesired visitors, and had to be evicted after a display of considerable force. . . . During the chief hours of the day, when not (or whilst) being shelled, we were pretty busy with telegrams and reports and queries and excursions and alarums. We were comfortable enough in the housekeeper's room, and got our meals 'reg'lar,' and we even had two or three arm-chairs, and got our newspapers and mails fairly well, which used to arrive with our rations at 9 p.m. or thereabouts. But a minor trial was the fact that two out of our five panes of glass had been blown in by shell, and let in an icy draught on most days. So we got some partially oiled paper, and made some paste and stuck up the panes. The first shell explosion made the paper sag, the second made it shiver, and the third blew it out. The paste would not stick—it was the wrong sort of flour, or something. Then we used jam—that glutinous saccharine mess known as 'best plum jam'—and blue sugar paper, and it stuck quite fairly well. But it wouldn't dry, and tears of jam used to trickle down the paper panes and mingle with the tintacks and the breadcrumbs on the sill. The room was even then fairly dark, but the shell-bursts again shivered the jam paper and burst it, and we had to take to cardboard and drawing-boards. This made it still darker, and was not even then successful, for the explosions still shook the boards down and eventually broke another pane; it was most trying. On the last day but one four panes had been broken, and on the last day, as will be recounted, all were broken and the whole window blown in. Then we left. But what was of much vaster interest, of course, than these trifles, was the desperate fighting which was being waged along our front, not 1,000 yards from the Château. Our two battalions being entrenched in the wood, did not receive such a severe hammering as the brigades on either side—the 7th and 9th, respectively on our right and left—who were more in the open, and the shelling and attacks on them were incessant, as well as on troops still further off on the other side of them. The 11th November was a typically unpleasant day. It started with a touch of comedy, Weatherby arriving stark naked in my room at 6.30 a.m., just when I was shaving, saying, 'I say, Sir, may I finish my dressing in here? They're shelling the bath-room!' He had a towel and a few clothes on his arm, et praetereâ nihil. . . . The shelling continued till 10. It was on this morning that Brown was damaged and lots of windows blown in." August 20, 1914 (pages 9–10): "We had arrived on the Tuesday (18th), and on the Thursday Sir C. Fergusson (commanding 5th Division) paraded the Brigade by battalions and made them a short speech, telling us we were to move on the morrow, and giving us a few technical tips about the Germans and how to meet their various wiles, largely about machine guns and their methods of attack in large numbers. The Bedfords were the most interested audience, and interrupted him every now and then with ''Ear, 'ear,' and a little hand-clapping at important points. I think the General was a little nonplussed at this attention: I know I was. Whether it was due or not to the audience being accustomed to attending political meetings at home, or to the air of Bedfordshire being extremely vitalizing, I don't know; but once or twice afterwards, when the battalion was addressed by General Smith-Dorrien, and even by Sir J. French, they showed their approbation in the manner above set forth—somewhat to my confusion." Later on Lord Edward writes: "We were inspected both by Sir Horace and, half an hour later, by Sir John French, who were both pleased to say complimentary things of the brigade. It did us good. The Bedfords again put me to confusion by calling out ''Ear, 'ear!' at telling points of the speeches—curious folk—the only battalion I ever heard do so: 587 men and two officers on parade, not one of the latter of whom, except the Quartermaster, had come out with the battalion. Griffith was on leave, his place being taken by Major Mackenzie, V.C., who had just joined. All the other officers who had left Ireland with me in Aug. were either killed, wounded, or sick. We were under orders to go into the trenches again shortly, taking over from Maude (the victor of Bagdad), now commanding the 14th Brigade; he also had the Dorsets and Norfolks, scraped up from various places, attached to him. His line was in front of Dranoutre. On the 29th Nov. we took over there, a most complicated arrangement which only evolved itself clearly during the next week. I had the East Surreys and Manchesters under me for a time, and then the K.O.S.B.'s, all interchanging and intershuffling with my battalions, the main reason being that I had not got the Cheshires, so had to shift as best I could without them, picking up a battalion of the 13th or 14th Brigade when one was available. The line was not exactly nice. We had, it is true, got rid of the worst bit, Hill 73, on to the 3rd Division, which was next door on the left; but it extended all the same for an unpleasant length on our right, which was south of the Wulverghem-Messines road, the right of the brigade on our right being on the Douve. At the longest—the length that the brigade had to defend varied according to circumstances—the line was just over 2,500 yards; at its shortest it was about 2,200. Considering that the normal frontage (defensive) of the Brigade at full strength was 900 to 1,300 yards, this was a bit 'thin' in more senses than one. As we were here for three months off and on—from the beginning of Dec. till the end of Feb.—it may be worth while trying to describe it, if I can. Imagine a bit of rolling country—rather like parts of Leicestershire—fair-sized fields, separated mostly by straggling fences interspersed with wire (largely barbed), and punctuated by tall trees. Patches of wood in places, spinney size for the most part. Low hills here and there—Kemmel, Scherpenberg, Ploegsteert Wood—but all outside our area. For villages, Dranoutre, Neuve Eglise, Wulverghem and Lindenhoek, of which the two last-named were already more than half shot to pieces and almost deserted. Opposite our right was Messines—a mile and a half in front of our line—its big, square, old church tower still standing; it may have had a spire on the top, but, if so, it had disappeared before we came. Nearly opposite our extreme left, but out of our jurisdiction and in the sphere of the division on our left, was Wytschaete (pronounce Wich Khâte), one and a half miles off. The cavalry had held both Messines (locally pronounced Mersé) and Wytschaete at the end of Oct., but had been overwhelmingly attacked here and driven out of them, so that the two villages formed a hostile bulge into our line. We had been in hopes of driving attacks into the base of the bulge and thus forcing a retirement. But the Germans reinforced the bulge and entrenched it heavily, and instead of our cutting off the bulge, it became flatter and flatter, without giving way at the point, so that we had to retire slightly on either side, and not they. Farms, nearly all of them roofless and half ruined, were dotted about over the country; small ones for the most part they were, and of the usual type—a liquid and stinking manure-heap, surrounded on three sides by a living house and barns. Of the roads, those from Dranoutre to Neuve Eglise, via Wulverghem to Messines, were pavé—i.e., cobblestones down the centre and mud on both sides. Those joining Lindenhoek to Neuve Eglise and Wulverghem were also mostly pavé. The remainder were mere field tracks for the most part, rarely metalled, and in wet weather almost impassable for mud. Oh, that mud! We have heard lots about Flanders mud, but the reality transcends imagination, especially in winter. Greasy, slippery, holding clay, over your toes in most places and over your ankles in all the rest—where it is not over your knees—it is the most horrible 'going' I know anywhere. Whether you are moving across ploughed or grass fields or along lanes, you are perpetually skating about and slipping up on the firmer bits and held fast by the ankles in the softer ones. There is no stone in the district, nothing but rich loamy clay, alias mud. However much you dig, you never come across stone, nothing but sticky mud which clings to your shovel and refuses to be parted from it—mud that has to be scraped off at almost every stroke, mud that absorbs water like a sponge, yet refuses to give it up again. Every little puddle and rut, every hoof depression full of rain, remains like that for weeks. Even when the weather is fine, the water does not seem to evaporate, but remains on the surface. And when it rains, as it did all that winter (except when it snowed), the state of the trenches is indescribable. Some were, frankly, so full of water that they had to be abandoned, and a breastwork erected behind. But a breastwork is slow work, especially if you are less than 100 yards from the enemy. For weeks, indeed, the garrison of one particular trench had to lie out on the mud or on what waterproofs they could get, behind a shelter two to three feet high—always growing a little yet never to be made to a real six-feet height by reason of conspicuousness and consequent clusters of Black Marias. Other trenches varied from five inches to five feet deep in mud; in one a Dorset man was literally almost drowned and drawn forth with great difficulty. Many cases occurred of semi-submersion, and as for moving up the communication trenches during the winter, it was generally an impossibility, for they were either knee-deep in water or in mud, and simply refused to be drained. So men preferred the risk of a stray bullet to the certainty of liquid mud to the knees and consequent icy discomfort for twenty-four hours and more. And as for the unfortunate ration-parties and men bringing up heavy trench stores, their task was really one of frightful labour, for, for two men to cross a large and slippery muddy series of fields, carrying a 100-lb. box between them, was no joke. First, one would slide up and skate off in one direction, whilst the other did his best to hold on, generally resulting in dropping his end of the box or finding himself on the flat of his back. Then the parts would be reversed, but they always slid up in opposite directions—the mud saw to that—and they would arrive in the trenches, after their stroll of a mile or less, absolutely exhausted and dripping with sweat. It was difficult enough, over much of the ground, to avoid slipping up even when burdened by nothing more than a walking-stick—that I know from personal experience. Yet for many weeks the men had to do this and suffer, for fascines and bricks, besides sandbags, were only just beginning to make their appearance in Dec., and floor-boards and gratings and gravel and trench stores and wire-netting and revetments and planks and iron sheeting and trestles and hurdles of all sorts, did not really materialize in anything like sufficient numbers till March. The drainage of the trenches was heart-breaking. After a heavy day or two of rain the parapets would fall down in hunks into the foot of water or so in the trenches, and would churn up into liquid mud, only to be removed by large spoons, of which we had none, or buckets, of which we had but very few. It was too thick to drain off down the very, very gradual slopes which were the best we could do, and too liquid to be shovelled away; so there it would remain, and our strenuous efforts in rebuilding the parapets (for at this period we had no revetting material) would only result, a night or two later, in still further collapse. The R.E. companies, both 17th and 59th, worked like heroes, and so particularly did the Norfolks and Bedfords; but it was most disheartening work. No sooner was one parapet fairly complete than another fell in; and when this was mended, the first one would collapse again under the incessant downpour. And all this time wire entanglements had to be put up in front under hostile fire, trenches connected up and drained, support trenches dug, communication trenches improved, loop-holes made, defences thickened and strengthened, saps pushed out, all under the fire of an enemy anything from 60 to 200 yards off, and always on rather higher ground than ourselves, worse luck, so that he had the whip-hand. Soon came the period of hand grenades, in which he had six to one the best of us in numbers; and then in rifle grenades ditto, ditto; and then in trench mortars, flare-lights, searchlights and rockets—wherein we followed him feebly and at a great distance; for where he sent up 100 (say) light balls at night, we could only afford five or six, and other things in proportion. Later on came the Minenwerfer, an expanded type of trench mortar, and its bomb; but up to the end of Feb. his efforts in this direction were not very serious, though I allow that he did us more harm thereby than we him. For our trench mortars were in an experimental stage, made locally by the R.E., and constructed of thin gas-pipe iron, and home-made jam-pot bombs, whose behaviour was always erratic, and sometimes, I regret to say, fatal to the mortarist. (Poor Rogers, R.E., a capital subaltern, was killed thus, besides others, I fear.)" Later Lord Edward Gleichen writes: "As regards myself . . . my days of connection with the brigade were numbered. I had heard, with mixed but pleasant feelings, that I had been promoted Major-General, 'for distinguished service' on the 18th Feb. (Weatherby got a Brevet Majority in the same Gazette), and I was now ordered to go home and report myself in London."

NASH, WILLIAM FLEETWOOD, Major, was born 27 Sept. 1861, son of the late Henry Fleetwood Nash, Esq., of Upton Lea, Slough, Buckinghamshire. His mother was Maria, daughter of Charles Wilkinson, Esq., of Hornsea, Yorkshire. He was educated at Rugby and Sandhurst, and obtained his commission 22 Jan. 1881, and joined the 34th Regt. of Infantry (afterwards called the Border Regt.) at Carlisle. He was Adjutant of the Militia. In 1889 he was promoted Captain, and in 1894 was selected as Adjutant of the 1st Border Regt. He served in the Burmese Expedition of 1889–90, when he was entrusted with the care of the battalion treasure chest. He received the Medal and clasp inscribed "Burmah, 1889–1892." On 31 Oct. 1898, he was promoted to the rank of Major. He proceeded with the 1st Battn. to South Africa on the outbreak of war there in 1899, and in Nov. of the same year was specially selected to raise and command a battalion, afterwards called the Imperial Light Infantry, and took part in many engagements in Natal, notably Spion Kop, in which action, on the retirement being ordered, he was one of the last to leave the top of the hill which he and his battalion had held with much tenacity. The record of his services in South Africa as given in the Army List is as follows: "South African War, 1899–1902. In command Imperial Light Infantry from Dec. 1899; operations in Natal, 1899; Relief of Ladysmith, including operations of 17 to 24 Jan. 1900, and action at Spion Kop; operations of 5–7 Feb. 1900, and action at Vaal Kranz; operations on Tugela Heights (14 to 27 Feb. 1900), and action at Pieter's Hill; operations in Natal (March to June, 1900), including action at Laing's Nek (6 to 9 June); operations in Cape Colony, south of Orange River, 1899; operations in the Transvaal from 30 Nov. 1900. Despatches [London Gazette, 8 Feb. 1901]; created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: William Fleetwood Nash, Major, Border Regt. In recognition of services during the recent operations in South Africa." Lieut.-Colonel Nash was mentioned in Despatches by Sir R. Buller, re the Relief of Ladysmith, in which he reported: "Major (Local Lieut.-Colonel) W. F. Nash, Border Regt., commanded the Imperial Light Infantry. The extremely good work done by this battalion is due to the excellent manner in which it was commanded by Lieut.-Colonel Nash." He received the Queen's Medal with five clasps, inscribed, "Laing's Nek," "Transvaal," "Tugela Heights" and "Cape Colony," and King's Medal with two clasps. He retired from the Army in Nov. 1905, and was placed on the List of Reserve of Officers. On the outbreak of war in Aug. 1914, he was appointed to the command of the Border Depôt and 34th Regimental District at Carlisle, with the temporary rank of Lieut.-Colonel. He died at Carlisle on the 28th Dec. 1915, after a short illness following a severe operation for an internal complaint, at the age of 54. He was a fine soldier, being a man of great coolness and resource, and very keen on his profession.



William Fleetwood Nash.

KING, ALEXANDER JAMES, Lieut.-Colonel, was born 15 July, 1863, eldest son of the late Rev. Edward King, B.A., F.R.H.S., F.S.A. Scotland. He was educated at Radley College, and joined the King's Own Regt. as Lieutenant, from the Militia, 12 Nov. 1884, and became Captain 27 July, 1892. He took part in the Expedition to Dongola, 1896; in the operations of 7 June and 19 Sept.; in the Camel Corps, and was present at the actions of Firket, Hoffir and Dongola. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 3 Nov. 1896]; received the Medal; 4th Class Medjidie, and the Egyptian Medal with two clasps. He served in the Nile Expedition of 1897, including the Flying Column up the River Atbara. He received a clasp to the Egyptian Medal; in the Nile Expedition of 1898, when he was present at the Battles of Atbara and Khartum. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 24 May and 30 Sept. 1898]; was given the Brevet of Major 16 Nov. 1898, and two clasps to the Egyptian Medal. He had been employed with the Egyptian Army from 19 Oct. 1894, to 28 Nov. 1898. He was appointed A.D.C. to Lieut.-General Sir Archibald Hunter, K.C.B., D.S.O., in India (14 May to 20 Sept. 1890), and in the South African Campaign of 1899–1902; in Natal, 21 Sept. to 8 Oct. 1899, and in South Africa 24 June, 1899, and commanded the Kimberley Mounted Corps during the Relief of Kimberley. Served during operations in Natal, 1899, including actions at Rietfontein and Lombard's Kop; Defence of Ladysmith, including sortie of 7 Dec. 1899, and action of 6 Jan. 1900; Relief of Mafeking; operations in the Transvaal and Orange River Colony, July to Nov. 1900, including action at Wittebergen. He was mentioned in Despatches by Sir G. S. White, 2 Dec. 1899, and 23 March, 1900 [London Gazette, 8 Feb. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with five clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Alexander James King, Captain and Brevet Major (Local Lieut.-Colonel), King's Own Royal Lancaster Regt. In recognition of services during the recent operations in South Africa." He became Captain, and Major 22 Jan. 1904. He retired 8 Sept. 1906. He is honorary Lieut.-Colonel, Fife and Forfar Yeomanry, and is a J.P. for Aberdeenshire. He served in the European War, in the Remount Department, in France, Egypt and Palestine, and was mentioned in Sir A. J. Murray's Despatch of 26 Sept. 1916, and created a C.M.G. in 1918.

INGOUVILLE-WILLIAMS, EDWARD CHARLES, Major (Local Lieut.-Colonel), was born 13 Dec. 1861, son of the late General Sir J. W. C. Williams, K.C.B., and of Isabella Georgiana, daughter of John Ingouville, Esq., of La Frégonière, Jersey. He was gazetted to the 3rd Foot, as Second Lieutenant, from the Militia, 23 April, 1881, and became Lieutenant, The Buffs, 1 July, 1881. He served in the Sudan Expedition, 1884–85 (Nile), as Special Officer for Boats (Staff Captain), and received the Medal with clasp, and Khedive's Star. He was promoted to Captain 1 Nov. 1892; was Adjutant, The Buffs, 20 May, 1894, to 21 Jan. 1898. From 22 Jan. 1898, to 10 April, 1899, he was specially employed with the Egyptian Army, as Special Service Officer, and served in the Nile Expedition of 1898, taking part in the battles of Atbara and Khartum. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 24 May, and 30 Sept. 1898]; was given the Brevet of Major 16 Nov. 1898; received the Medal and the Egyptian Medal with two clasps. In the Nile Expedition of 1899 he served as D.A.A.G. to the Kordofan Field Force, and received a clasp to the Egyptian Medal. He served in the South African War, 1899 to 1902, on Sir Charles Warren's Staff; as Provost-Marshal, Nov. 1899, to 19 May, 1900; Brigade-Major from May to 31 Dec. 1900; Commanding Mounted Infantry Corps, and Commanding a Mobile Column 1 Jan. 1901, to 25 Sept. 1902; was present at the Relief of Ladysmith, including operations of 17 to 24 Jan. 1900; action at Spion Kop; operations of 5 to 7 Jan. 1900, and action at Vaal Kranz; operations on Tugela Heights 14 to 27 Feb. 1900, and action at Pieter's Hill. Operations in Natal, March to June, 1890, including actions at Laing's Nek (6 to 9 June). Operations in Orange Free State and Transvaal. Operations in Orange River Colony, Jan. to May, 1901. Operations in the Transvaal, May, 1901, to 31 May. 1902. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 8 Feb. 1900 (Sir R. H. Buller); 30 March, 17 June, and 9 Nov. 1900, and London Gazette, 9 July to 11 Oct. 1901]; was given the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 12 Oct. 1901; received the Queen's Medal with six clasps; King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Edward Charles Ingouville-Williams, Major (now Local Lieutenant-Colonel), The Buffs (East Kent Regt.). In recognition of services during the recent operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented in South Africa. He was transferred to the Worcestershire Regt. 4 April, 1903; commanded the 2nd Battn. Worcestershire Regt., 1904 to 1908, and became Lieutenant-Colonel 10 March, 1904. He was created a C.B. in 1910; was Commandant, School of Mounted Infantry, Longmoor Camp 1 March, 1910, to 17 June, 1912; was given the Brevet of Colonel 25 Dec. 1905; became Colonel 10 March, 1908; Temporary Brigadier-General 18 June, 1912, to 2 June, 1915; Commanding 16th Infantry Brigade, Irish Command, 16 June, 1912, to 4 Aug. 1914. On the outbreak of war with Germany he took his Brigade to France, commanding it until he was promoted to Major-General, in June, 1915, for distinguished service in the field, and given command of the 34th Division, which he trained and took to the front in Jan. 1916, being in the front line till 4 July, when the division was withdrawn to refit, but was again put into the line, with two fresh brigades to replace the 102nd and the 103rd, which had lost heavily. The Division was in the fighting line till the 19th July, when it was again withdrawn to rest and to refit. On the 22nd July, Major-General Ingouville-Williams went with his A.D.C. to the Bois-de-Mametz to make a personal reconnaissance of the ground where he was to take his Division into action the following week; was caught in a barrage of fire, hit by a piece of shell and killed instantly. He had been mentioned in Despatches four times for his services in the European War.

TWYFORD, ERNEST HENRY SAMUEL, Major, was born 28 Oct. 1863. He joined the Scottish Rifles 5 Dec. 1883, as Lieutenant, from the Militia, and was Adjutant, Scottish Rifles, 20 Nov. 1887, to 19 Nov. 1891. He served in the Chin-Lushai Expedition in 1889, as Transport Officer. He became Captain, Scottish Rifles, 7 March, 1894, and Major 3 April, 1899. Major Twyford served in the South African War, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order, 29 Nov. 1900, and the decoration was gazetted on 19 April, 1901: "Ernest Henry Samuel Twyford, Major, Scottish Rifles. In recognition of services during the recent operations in South Africa." Major Twyford was killed 13 April, 1901, in the Badfontein Valley, on his way to join the Royal Scots, into which regiment he had been promoted to Second-in-Command for good service in Natal.

BONUS WILLIAM JOHN, Major, was born 9 July, 1862, son of Major-General Joseph Bonus, K.P. He was educated at Harrow and Sandhurst; was gazetted to the Dorsetshire Regt., as Lieutenant, 9 Sept. 1882. He served in India and Egypt. He became Captain 21 June, 1890; was A.D.C. in 1890; D.A.A.G., Scottish District, 23 July, 1895, to 23 Nov. 1899, and was promoted Major 30 April, 1899. He served in the South African War, from 1899 to 1902, with the Dorsetshire Regt. in Natal until the Relief of Ladysmith, being present at the operations to 24 Jan. 1900, and at the action of Spion Kop; operations of 5 to 7 Feb. 1900, and action at Vaal Kranz; operations on Tugela Heights (14 to 27 Feb. 1900), and action at Pieter's Hill. 1902, and was in South Africa from Oct. 1899, to Jan. 1900, during which time he was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 16 April, 1901], and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Harry Crewe Godley, Capt., Northumberland Fusiliers. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The D.S.O. was awarded for the excellent services he rendered during the campaign, when he was left in command of a post with two companies of the Northampton Regt., to command Enslin Railway Station, on the (2nd or) 8th Sept. 1899, and defended it for nine hours against a force of from 900 to 1,000 mounted Boers with two guns, under Commandant Prinsloo, who made a surprise attack in order to destroy the line and capture the stores which were being guarded; and, notwithstanding the very superior force of the burghers, the two companies of the Northampton Regt. successfully resisted the attack until relieved by reinforcements from Lord Methuen, when the enemy retreated. He returned to England Jan. 1900, was granted sick leave, and appointed Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General, Jersey, during 1902, and died at Ryde, Isle of Wight, 19 Feb. 1907, after a service of 23 years and 21 days. He always took a great interest in the regimental sports, and his company was first for the "Evelyn Wood" Competition, 1898, and second the year following. He was very sociable and popular with all ranks, very active, a good rider, fond of horses, and very keen on hunting. Major Godley married, at Monkstown, Dublin, 23 April, 1892, Elizabeth Mary Annesley; they had three sons: Francis William Crewe, born 25 Jan. 1893; Gerald Annesley George, born 15 April, 1897; Richard Harry Fetherston, born 31 May, 1902; and a daughter, Elizabeth Adeline Faith.

Sir Henry Wilson was created a Baronet in 1919; appointed Colonel, Royal Irish Rifles, 11 Nov. 1915.

Henry Hughes Wilson.

As the above record shows, Sir Henry Wilson is an Irishman. "An impression exists that Sir Henry's talents were not recognized earlier owing to his attitude towards the Ulster trouble before the war. Whether this is really so perhaps only Mr. Asquith can really tell. As an Irishman born, Sir Henry rather justifiably regarded the suppression of the Ulster 'rebellion' by force as a terrible mistake. It was probably owing to his hesitancy that the whole thing fizzled, and also that the British Army was saved the loss of dozens of good officers. It is not generally known that every day he received letters from officers who preferred to resign their commissions rather than kill their fellow-countrymen. Instead of sending their resignations in, he kept them in his pocket until Ulster had simmered down, and then quietly tore them up."

Educated at Marlborough, he years afterwards thus addressed the O.T.C. of his old school: "We belong to the finest empire the world has ever seen, and you young fellows have the future of that Empire in your hands. There is an old saying which I am fond of quoting. It is the soldier's creed, and it is my advice to you: Be kindly to children, be courteous to women, be loyal and true to your comrades."

Some of his speeches make interesting reading. At Australia House he said: "I have been a soldier for 39 years, and I have always understood that we in the Army were soldiers because we could not pass exams or make money. We weave education into the life of the soldier, so that when the men of the Army, the Navy and the Air Force go back into civil life they will not only be good soldiers, sailors and airmen, but good citizens."

The O.T.C., he said, had produced a number of great gentlemen and great soldiers. He himself, the Field-Marshal remarked, was a man of no knowledge, and very little experience for a great number of years. He told his audience that in Germany they were "trying to get a bigger outlook, but having let go the handle of the parish pump, they appear to have fallen into the horse-pond. . . . There never was such a story as the story of the British Empire. As an Irishman, I tell you English people that if you are wise you will continue to paint the salt-water red, and subject everybody who bathes in it to a fine of 2s. 6d. for trespass."

We are told that when the Prince of Wales was made a Freeman of the Mercers' Company, and Sir Henry Wilson made a speech, the latter said he felt like an old West Country parson who had to hold two services, one in his own church and one in a church over the moor. On arriving at the church over the moor, he said he had forgotten to bring a most admirable sermon he had written. "Luckily," he said, "as I came across the moor I remembered a beautiful story, which I will tell you in place of the sermon." Then he said, "Damn. I have forgotten that too."

Henry Wilson joined the Militia Battalion of the Royal Irish Rifles, of which regiment he subsequently became honorary Colonel, and was gazetted first to the Royal Irish Regt., and later to the Rifle Brigade, serving with his regiment in the Burmese Expedition of 1886–88. In June, 1887, he was wounded, but making a quick recovery, saw the campaign through to a finish. He took a course at the Staff College, Camberley, from 1892 to 1894, and on passing out (with honours) served with the Intelligence Division as a Staff Captain for three years, until, in Sept. 1897, he went down to Aldershot as Brigade-Major of the 2nd Infantry Brigade. There he remained until the outbreak of the Boer War, when he went out as Brigade-Major of the Light Brigade in General Buller's Corps. The Brigade perpetually harassed the Boers, and Wilson's good work as Brigade-Major, allied to his "inimitable quality of seeing things for himself," attracted the notice of Lord Roberts, who appointed him D.A.A.G. on his Staff. Wilson remained with his new Chief until the latter left South Africa to take over the post of Commander-in-Chief in London. As soon as Lord Roberts was installed as Commander-in-Chief, he brought Lieut.-Colonel Wilson, as he then was, up to the War Office to assist him in winding up the business of the South African Campaign. This occupied his time for nearly a year, when, anxious to have a turn of regimental duty, he was given command of a provisional battalion for a year, after which he went back to the War Office, and was A.A.G. under the late General Sir Henry Hildyard, who was Director-General of Military Education and Training. After holding this post for three years, he had, in 1917, "the great honour of becoming the Commandant of the Staff College he had entered 25 years previously. Of the many officers who passed through his hands during the three years he was there, few will ever forget Sir Henry's perpetual admonition to 'see everything you are about to undertake.' . . . For thirty years he has pursued the policy of seeing things for himself." He tried to prepare these officers for the war he knew would come.

After the war had broken out he was thus described: "Tall and spare of figure, with calculation and determination written all over his face, he has few illusions as to the best way to win the war. As far back as 1911, in addressing Eton College O.T.C., he told them that the foreign nations were drilling and preparing for an early war. In 1913 he told the students of the London University that a huge empire such as ours could not be maintained without a big army as well as a navy. It has been left to the present war to prove the truth of his statement. A man who harbours no illusions is most likely to serve his country in a critical hour best."

During his tenure of office at Camberley he was created a C.B., and in 1910 he came back to the War Office as Director of Military Operations, a post in which he did some of his best work and which he held up to the outbreak of war. As at Camberley, he tried to have everything prepared for the European War, which, in common with Lord Roberts and many other soldiers, he had foreseen, and for which, so far as in him lay, he was determined to be forearmed. In Lord Roberts's book about National Service, that great soldier foretold, not only that war would come, but that the Germans would attack France by breaking through Belgium. Many turned a deaf ear to the Field-Marshal's warnings, but not so Sir Henry Wilson, and it was largely owing to his long-sightedness that the Expeditionary Force was ready when the hour struck. A newspaper says of Wilson's work as Director of Military Operations: "It was while he was at the head of this directorate that he made his mark as an administrator, rendering valuable service to Lord Haldane when he was organizing the Expeditionary Force. After the Agadir incident he went, at Lord Haldane's request, with Lord French to Paris, and carried on the 'conversations,' of which we have heard so much, with the French General Staff, and which prepared the way for the share taken by our Expeditionary Force in the campaign of 1914. Sir Henry speaks French as easily as English, and while in France was very helpful to Lord French, who has a very slight acquaintance with the French language."

It has been truly said that the British Army contains no more unassuming soldier than Sir Henry Wilson. His name came before the public but little up to about the beginning of 1918. In the early days of the war he crossed the Channel as understudy to Sir Archibald Murray, who was Chief of the General Staff in France during the first year of the campaign. Early in 1915 Wilson handed over his duties as Deputy Chief of the Staff to General Maurice, and took up the duties of Chief Liaison Officer at French G.H.Q. In this capacity he was a great success, as he got on so well with the French. Indeed, he became a great favourite, and we are told that he won the complete confidence of General Joffre and his Staff. He was created a K.C.B. in 1915.

From 1915 to 1917 he commanded the IVth Army Corps, opposite Vimy Ridge, where he gained a great reputation, and from 17 March to 13 July, 1917, he was Chief of the British Mission to the French Army.

Sir Henry Wilson and General De Castelnau went as military members of the diplomatic mission to Petrograd. Then Lord Milner and Lord Revelstoke and their companions saw only too plainly the crisis which was coming, and the mission ended abortively owing to the outbreak of the Russian Revolution. On his return from Petrograd Wilson resumed his duties at French Army Headquarters, and there remained until he was appointed, in Sept. 1917, to succeed General Wolfe Murray as General Officer Commanding-in-Chief, Eastern District. This appointment surprised many people at the time, as, after his conspicuous Staff services during the war, it was generally supposed that he would be given a high command at the front. His new appointment lasted from 1 Sept. to 1 Nov. 1917, and then his presence in London at the crisis in the Italian campaign enabled Sir Henry Wilson to take up his new duties as British Military Representative at the Supreme War Council at Versailles (2 Nov. 1917, to 18 Feb. 1918).

A newspaper said of him at this time: "This distinguished soldier, whose activities have been chiefly diverted into Staff channels, none the less possesses all those qualities of leadership which eminently fit him for the position to which he has been called. The functions of the new Committee and its relations to the unified War Council, which has been created at the same time, have not been publicly defined; but its rôle will naturally be consultative and advisory rather than executive. Without interfering with the conduct of military operations, the Committee, working collectively and harmoniously, will examine the situations as they occur, and co-ordinate strategy as between the four Commanders-in-Chief who have charge of the operations in the Western theatres of war. By this means will the Allied belligerent Powers secure that unity of direction which has been so marked a feature of the enemy's strategical combinations. With his recent experience of liaison work, and with his extensive knowledge of the strategical side of war, Sir Henry Wilson will prove to be a tower of strength on the Committee."

In airing his views on the composition of the War Council, a journalist remarks: "The men chosen are all true and tried, even though, with the exception of Irish Wilson, they are not precisely of an age at which one looks for brilliant offensive strategy. Wilson is 53, and one of our brightest and best, with plenty of actual fighting experience, as well as the highest reputation for Staff work."

Another writer says: "Modesty is proverbially a trait in the character of great British soldiers. From Wellington down to Haig all our military chiefs have been men to whom advertisement of any kind was loathsome. But probably this effacement of self never had a more rigorous exponent than the soldier who is to represent Great Britain at the Allied War Council, with its headquarters in Paris. Lieut.-General Sir Henry Hughes Wilson is the name of the British representative, and it is safe to say that few people outside the Army have ever heard of him. How this comparatively unknown Irishman comes to be appointed to such an enormously important post will probably mystify many civilians. But there is no mystery to the men who have soldiered with him. Wilson is a soldier born and bred, a man, who, after 33 years' struggle and study in his profession, is about to gain his reward. It is rarely, indeed, in the military history of Great Britain that an infantryman succeeds in reaching high strategical office. Kitchener was a Royal Engineer; French and Haig are both cavalrymen. Wilson is the product of a line regiment, for on being commissioned in 1884 he was posted to the Royal Irish Rifles. He did not stay with them long, however, for a few months after he was transferred to the Rifle Brigade. . . . Exactly what effect the appointment of an infantry officer to a position of strategical control will have, only the future can tell The enormously important factor which the line regiments represent in all battles makes Sir Henry's presence at the Council all the more valuable. The Prime Minister, it is said, possesses the greatest confidence in Sir Henry Wilson's grip of the war situation. . . . The chance of his lifetime came with dramatic suddenness during the height of the Austro-German advance on Italy, when he was notified that he was relieved of his command and was to proceed to Italy with Mr. Lloyd George, Sir William Robertson and General Smuts. . . . Perhaps Wilson's most outstanding quality is his determination to see things for himself. This is a virtue which commends him enormously to the officers and men who do the actual fighting. How greatly Sir Henry believes in this policy and how he has devoted himself to his profession is proved by the fact that for 25 years prior to the war he spent practically all his holidays cycling up and down what is now the Western front. Perhaps the reason was to be found in that uncanny instinct for war which most Irishmen possess; perhaps it was an intelligent premonition of the fact that Flanders—for centuries the cockpit of Europe—would not belie its past history. Certain it is that Sir Henry, often accompanied by his wife, spent all his leisure time pedalling round and about the roads which are now given over to the tramp of armed men and never-ending transport. French officers even now are amazed at the wonderful knowledge which Sir Henry possesses. Passchendaele, the centre of some of the most fierce fighting, is as well known to him as his native village of Currygrane, in Ireland."

Another extract is from an appreciation with the doubtfully complimentary title, "Sir Henry Wilson (By One Who Knows Him)":

"The selection of Lieut.-General Sir Henry Wilson to be the British member of the Central Military Committee which has been appointed to secure unity of strategical direction in the Western theatre of war, will meet with general approval, for there is no one quite so well qualified as he is by his antecedent career to fill a position which will require the exercise of great tact, in addition to the knowledge of war which Sir Henry Wilson possesses in so high a degree. An Irishman, fifty-three years of age, of fine physique and soldierly bearing, he has had a distinguished military career, during which he has acquired an accumulated experience of war in all its branches."

On 19 Feb. 1918, Sir Henry became Chief of the Imperial General Staff and a member of the War Cabinet, in succession to Sir William Robertson. The "Times" of 18 Feb. 1918, gives a sketch of Sir Henry's services up to that date. "To this brief record of a remarkable career," continues the writer, "it may be added that the new Chief of the Imperial General Staff is before everything else an enthusiast for his profession. A devoted friend and admirer of Lord Roberts, he shared to the full the conviction that the German War was coming, and that its result would depend on the 'preparedness' of the British people. As Director of Military Training and Commandant of the Staff College he played a large part in creating the new school of Staff Officers, who have created in turn the organization of the great armies now in the field. As Director of Military Operations he was mainly responsible for the perfection of the arrangements which brought the B.E.F. into action. With the French he has always been an immensely popular figure. With General Foch, in particular, he has always worked on terms of special intimacy. The Versailles Council seemed to provide him with exactly the scope for which he was fitted, and it is a matter of real regret that he should be lost at so early a stage to that new and promising body. Only the vital importance of supporting it thoroughly in London compensates for the transfer of his services. He of all men can be trusted to see that it has every chance of development. For the rest, Sir Henry Wilson is a tall, loose-limbed Irishman, with a keen sense of humour and a broad outlook on life, a thinker and teacher rather than a leader of men, recognized everywhere as one of the shrewdest brains in the Army. . . . He . . . has still to be proved in one of the highest places which the Army has to offer."

Another writer speaks of "the charm with which he enmeshes you in less than ten-minutes' talk. Subtle and genial, with an armour-piercing sense of humour—a blend of Leo XIII. and Bernard Shaw—no man was ever less of a dour Ulsterman."

He married, in 1891, Cecil Mary, daughter of the late George Cecil Gore Wray, J.P., of Ardnamona, Donegal.

STIRLING, SIR GEORGE MURRAY HOME, Capt., Bart., of Glorat, was born at 16, Bryanston Square, London, W., 4 Sept. 1869, son of Sir Charles Elphinstone Fleming Stirling, 8th Bart., of Glorat (Nova Scotia Baronetcy, 1666), formerly Highland Borderers Militia, J.P. and D.L. for Stirlingshire, and of Anne Georgina, eldest daughter of James Murray. He was educated at Eton College, and the R.M.C., Sandhurst; joined the 2nd Essex Regt. (56th Foot, The Pompadours) as Second Lieutenant 9 Nov. 1889; became Lieutenant 7 Oct. 1892; served in the Chitral Campaign, 1895 (Medal and clasp); in the Tirah Campaign, 1897–98 (as Transport Officer); operations against the Khani Khel Chamkanis; operations in the Bazar Valley 25–30 Dec. 1897 (two clasps). He became Capt. 29 Jan. 1900. He served in the South African Campaign, 1899–1902; from Jan. to June, 1900, as Adjutant, Burma Mounted Infantry. He took part in the operations in the Orange Free State, March to May, 1900, including the actions of Poplar Grove, Dreifontein, Houtnek (Thoba Mountain,) Vet River (5 and 6 May) and Zand River. Also in the operations in the Transvaal in May and June, 1900, including actions near Johannesburg, Pretoria and Diamond Hill (11 and 12 June); operations in the Transvaal, west of Pretoria, 1 Aug. to Oct. 1900; operations in Orange River Colony, June to 31 July, 1900; operations in Transvaal till wounded in Sept. 1900; operations in the Transvaal, Jan. to April, 1901. He served as Staff Captain, Mounted Infantry Brigade, from 18 Oct. 1900, to 18 Feb. 1902, and was afterwards attached to the Army Service Corps as Officer Commanding Transport, Bloemfontein District, till June, 1902, when he returned to England. The following is an extract from C. S. Goldmann's "With General French and the Cavalry in South Africa," which gives a good account of the engagement at Sanna's Post, for which Sir George Stirling afterwards received the D.S.O.: "Reduced to ten men (seven gunners, one sergeant, one corporal and a bombardier), and himself the sole officer left with the battery, Major Hornby had to call volunteers to rescue the guns. The appeal was responded to by Capt. Humphreys, who was close by, by Lieut. Stirling (2nd Essex), Burma Mounted Infantry, by Lieut. Maxwell (18th Bengal Lancers), attached to Roberts's Horse, and a number of privates showed equal alacrity in lending help. Five of the men by themselves working with a will arranged to drag the two guns on the left a distance of 50 yards to a point behind the Station buildings, and the two on the outside were hauled by ten non-commissioned officers and gunners 100 yards to the shelter of a camp close up the line; the limbers also had to be brought up by manual effort. Singling out the middle gun, the Boers poured on it an unmeasured fire till it seemed as if nothing could live under such a fury of shell and bullet. The five dauntless men resumed the attempt at rescue by hand, but their strength was exhausted, and they had to turn to the horses that were standing in poor shelter behind a tin shed at the station. Four of the animals were brought forward in pairs only to be shot down. Another pair met the same fate. A gunner went out with each pair to hook in, while the driver held the horses. It was observed that when the men emerged from the shelter of the buildings, they bent their heads towards the direction from which the bullets were coming, as if they were withstanding a storm of hail. There had been 87 horses under the shelter of the shed; 85 were killed or disabled, and upon the remaining two animals depended the fate of the guns. Several bullets dropped hard by these two animals, throwing up dust to their middles, but the whizzing of the lead scarcely seemed to frighten them. They were with the utmost haste hitched up to the limber, and Lieut. Stirling proceeded to back them to the gun. The short space of a single yard separated the trail from the limber hook; one instant more and they would have plunged forward bearing the gun away into safety, but it was not to be. A few Boer muzzles, with unerring aim, snatched away the success that seemed so nearly assured and so richly deserved. Both horses were shot through the eyes and dropped dead. Driver Glasock was wounded at the same moment, and the last gun stood hopelessly derelict. All means of rescue had been exhausted and the gun must be abandoned." Sir George Stirling was wounded at Zandfontein. For his services in the South African War he was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 8 Feb. 1901]; received the Queen's South African Medal with four clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Sir George Murray Home Stirling, Capt., Essex Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." Served Somaliland F.F. 1903-4, and commanded the 7th Somali Camel Corps from 12 Nov. 1903, to June, 1904, taking part in operations in Somaliland and receiving the Medal and clasp. He succeeded to the Baronetcy 10 Sept. 1910; was appointed D.A.A.G., Mhow Division, India, 13 Jan. 1911, which appointment he vacated in Nov. 1914, in order to join his regiment in France. He had become Major on 12 Feb. 1912. After the outbreak of the European War he was appointed Provost-Marshal to the 5th Army Corps 29 Dec. 1914, to 15 Nov. 1915, and Temporary Lieut.-Colonel 16 Nov. 1915, on getting command of the 2nd Essex Regt. He was Commandant, Lines of Communication, British Armies in France, from 3 Oct. 1918, and Temporary Colonel from 1 Oct. 1918. He was wounded, and thrice mentioned in Despatches in 1915, 1917, and again in 1918, besides receiving a Brevet Lieut.-Colonelcy 1 Jan. 1918. Sir George Stirling is a member of the King's Bodyguard of Scotland, and a J.P. and D.L. for Stirlingshire. Colonel Sherston is a J.P. for Somerset. He married, in 1894, Evelyn Maude Maitland, eldest daughter of the late J. Maitland Spencer, of Oakhill, near Bath.

FITZWILLIAM, EARL (WILLIAM CHARLES DE MEURON WENTWORTH-FITZWILLIAM), Capt. Born 1872, son of Viscount Milton, J.P., and Laura, daughter of the late Lord Charles Beauclerk. He is the 7th Earl Fitzwilliam. The first Earl served five times as Queen Elizabeth's Lord Deputy in Ireland, being created Baron Fitzwilliam in 1620. He was educated at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge; was A.D.C. to the Marquess of Lansdowne in India, 1892–93; Major, 4th Battn. Oxfordshire Light Infantry. He was M.P. (Liberal Unionist) for Wakefield, 1895 to 1902. Lord Fitzwilliam served in South Africa, 1900, being employed under the Director of Supplies, Army Headquarters (graded as a Staff Captain), and taking part in the operations in Cape Colony and Orange River Colony, 1900. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 16 April, 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with four clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "William Charles De Meuron, Earl Wentworth-Fitzwilliam, Capt., 4th Battn. Oxfordshire Light Infantry. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the King 25 July, 1901. He succeeded his grandfather in 1902; became a Member of the County Council, Wicklow, and J.P., County Wicklow and West Yorkshire, also D.L., County Wicklow. Earl Fitzwilliam has travelled much in India, Europe and America, and is much interested in engineering, especially mining engineering. His favourite recreations are hunting, riding, shooting, cycling and polo. He was created K.C.V.O. in 1911. He became a Major, 4th Battn. Oxfordshire Light Infantry, and Major, West Riding Royal Horse Artillery, 1908, and was promoted to Brevet Lieut.-Colonel in 1913. He served in the European War from 1914; was mentioned in Despatches, and created a C.B.E. in 1919. In 1896 he married Lady Maud Frederica Elizabeth Dundas, daughter of the 1st Marquess of Zetland, and they have one son, Viscount Milton, born 31 Dec. 1910, and four daughters.

MACINNES, DUNCAN SAYRE, Lieut., was born at Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, 19 July, 1870, younger son of the late Honourable Donald MacInnes, of Hamilton, who, moving to Canada from Scotland in early life, became a Member of the Senate, and Mary MacInnes, daughter of the late Sir John Beverley Robinson, Bart., C.B., Chief Justice of Upper Canada (now the Province of Quebec). He was educated for some time for the Navy, in the Britannia, but his father ultimately determining on a military career for him, he entered the Royal Military College, Kingston, Canada, from which he passed out at the head of his year with Sword of Honour and Gold Medal, obtaining a commission as Second Lieutenant in the Corps of Royal Engineers on 16 July, 1891. He became Lieutenant 16 July, 1894. He saw much active service in the expedition to Ashanti; he was honourably mentioned, and awarded the Star issued for that campaign. Later he was employed on the erection of the fort at Coomassie, the capital of Ashanti, for the defence of the garrison of that place, and that its plan and execution reflected great credit on him and others concerned on its design and constitution is evidenced by the fact that it was for some time besieged by fifteen thousand Ashantis in 1900, and held out until relieved by Colonel (now General) Sir James Willcocks, who described it in "From Kabul to Kumassi" "as the best defensive post he saw in West Africa." Lieut. MacInnes acted for a time as Resident at Coomassie. During the South African War he performed specially valuable services between Feb. and May, 1900, in the Orange Free State, and particularly in the defence of Kimberley. Here he was employed on Corps duties, and in addition as Staff Officer to Colonel Kekewich, by whom he was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 8 May, 1900], for most valuable services in both the above capacities. A distinguished officer wrote to his father, whom he had known in Canada: "His praises are in everyone's mouth, and I am told that the success was in a large measure, for so young an officer, due to him." Between May and Nov. 1900, he was further engaged in operations in the Orange River Colony. He was again mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 29 July, 1902], and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order for his valuable services during the war [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Duncan Sayres MacInnes, Lieut., Royal Engineers. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, and presented there. He was Captain on 1 April, 1902, and had the Queen's Medal with three clasps, and the King's Medal with two clasps. He was married, on 22 Oct. 1902, at Montreal, Canada, to Millicent Wolfeston Thomas, daughter of F. Wolfeston Thomas and Harriet Goodhue Thomas, and their children are: Duncan Wolfeston, born 5 April, 1904 (now at Eton), and Elizabeth Robinson. He was employed with the South African Constabulary from Nov. 1902, to Dec. 1904. From 1905 to 1908 he was employed on the Staff in Canada, first as Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General, at Halifax, Nova Scotia, and afterwards as Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General with the Canadian Dominion Forces. His work in connection with the taking over of the defences of Halifax by the Dominion from the Imperial Government was very valuable, and a General Officer under whom he worked said that he was not surprised when, a year or two later, an officer holding a very high position in England spoke of him as one of the best Staff Officers he knew. From Halifax he went to Shorncliffe as Major, Royal Engineers, in charge of works which included the building of the Women's Hospital at that place, and from thence to the Staff College. He was General Staff Officer, 3rd Grade, from 1 April, 1910, to 10 Oct. 1912, and in 1912 was employed as Secretary to the Royal Flying Corps Committee, the result of whose deliberations was the formation of the Royal Flying Corps, which has since developed into the Royal Air Force. He was Major on 16 July, 1911. He passed the Staff College, and was General Staff Officer, 2nd Grade, from 1 April, 1913, to 4 Aug. 1914, on the Staff of the Staff College. He served in the European War, taking part in the Retreat from Mons, for which he had the Star. He was wounded in Nov. 1914. He was Deputy Assistant Director, War Office (temporary), from 19 Feb. 1915, to 8 March, 1915; Assistant Director from 9 March, 1915, to 30 Oct. 1915; Deputy Director 31 Oct. 1915; Director 27 March, 1916. He was Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel in 1915, and Brevet Colonel 29 Nov. 1915. In 1916 and 1917 he was Director of Aeronautical Equipment, with the rank of Brigadier-General, and did much good work. He resigned to go to the Front again, although it involved his relinquishing the rank of Brigadier-General. He was created a Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. He went to France in March, 1917, to perform the duties of Commanding Royal Engineer to the 42nd Division, and from thence after nine months was appointed Inspector of Mines at Headquarters, with the rank of Brigadier-General. On 23 May, 1918, he was killed while engaged in this duty, and was buried in the Military Cemetery at Etaples, close to the sea, 25 May, 1918. During the war he had been twice mentioned in Despatches, and had the Russian Order of St. Stanislaus, with the French Legion of Honour (Croix d'Officier), in 1917. The following are a few quotations from letters written after his death: (From a Field Officer): "He was one of the very bravest and most chivalrous characters I have ever known, and he was universally beloved by all who met him, from the highest in command to our car drivers, servants and orderlies. Everybody felt strangely drawn to him." (From another Field Officer): "He quickly won the admiration of all of us by his gallantry, unbounded energy and kind consideration of others, no matter what rank they held." (From a General Officer, under whom he immediately served): "He was so tremendously brave at Nieuwpoort and other nasty places, a well-known figure in his Division, and perfectly splendid in his work." The Service, his family, and his numerous friends have suffered a very great loss in his death.

BROOKE, VICTOR REGINALD, Lieut., was born at 53, Eaton Square, London, S.W., 22 Jan. 1873, son of Sir Victor Alexander Brooke, Bart., and Alice Sophia, daughter of Sir Alan Bellingham, Bart. He joined the 9th Lancers 12 Dec. 1894; became Lieutenant 29 April, 1896, and went to South Africa at the beginning of the Boer War (1899–1902). He took part in the Advance on Kimberley, including the actions at Belmont, Enslin, Modder River and Magersfontein; in the Relief of Kimberley; the operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900, including operations at Paardeberg; actions at Poplar Grove and Karee Siding. He was one of the first of our men to be wounded, and in a diary picked up off a wounded Boer was set down the enemy's regret that so good a friend and fighter had been, as they thought, killed. He returned to England to recover from his wounds, and had to have a finger removed. He passed the Staff College in the autumn; became Captain 6 May, 1901; returned to South Africa in Oct. 1901, as A.D.C. to Lieut.-General Sir Ian Hamilton, Chief of the Staff (9 Nov. 1901, to 11 Sept. 1902). He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901, and 29 July, 1902]; received the Queen's Medal with three clasps; the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901: "Victor Reginald Brooke, Lieut., 9th Lancers. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." Capt. Brooke became A.D.C. to Lord Kitchener, and served with him in that capacity in India (28 Nov. 1902, to 21 Dec. 1905); and as Assistant Military Secretary from 22 Dec. 1905, to 31 May, 1907. He was sent to Kabul with Sir Louis Dane's Mission at the end of 1904, when the Amir of Afghanistan bestowed an Afghan decoration on him. Capt. Brooke was given the Brevet of Major 7 June, 1905; accompanied the Amir of Afghanistan on his visit to India, Jan. and Feb. 1907, and was presented with the Afghan Order of "Harmat." He was promoted to Major, 9th Lancers, 6 Feb. 1907, and became Temporary Lieutenant-Colonel 1 June, 1907, and was Military Secretary to Lord Minto from 1 June, 1907, until Lord Minto left India at the end of 1910, when he rejoined his regiment. In Aug. 1914, he proceeded to France, forming part of General Headquarters Staff, as Liaison Officer, with General Sardet's Cavalry Corps, during the retreat from Belgium. The following is an extract from an appreciation of Major Brooke in the "Daily Telegraph," written by "A Friend": "As to the manner of his death and burial, there is something to be recorded. He died on the night of 29 Aug., and was buried early next morning at Château d'Annel, near Compiègne. The house had been turned into a hospital by Mrs. Depew, who left at eleven on the same day, owing to the approach of the German forces. The estate carpenter made his coffin, and one of the old men of the estate dug his grave. After the burial the old man said to Mrs. Depew: 'Regardez, Madame.' He pointed out a gravestone to the north of the grave, which had the inscription underneath the date, 1879, 'Chevalier de la Légion d'Honneur.' It belonged to one of the family which owned the Château d'Annel in those days, all of whom were buried there. Beside them the old gravedigger thought it right to lay Victor Brooke—Chevalier de la Légion d'Honneur indeed." Lord Kitchener said of him: "Victor Brooke is one of the best Staff Officers I have ever had, and quite one of the best all-round men to be found." When Lord Hardinge came home, he said to a friend: "Victor Brooke was loved by tens of thousands in India." Lady Minto wrote: "He was an ideal Military Secretary. An indefatigable worker himself, he had that rare gift of getting the best out of others. His example was such a stimulus to everyone to try and live up to his own high standard. Victor was beloved by the Viceroy and every member of his household, and no one was ever in his presence without feeling the better for the magnetic influence of his manly, straightforward character."

gallant officer entered an indignant protest against what he termed 'the voluminous verbiage' of a group of members below the Ministerial gangway. 'Get on with the war,' he demanded, 'and finish everything that interferes with the progress of the war.' 'If I had had the member for Hanley (Mr. Outhwaite) in my battalion,' he added, 'he would have been strung up by the thumbs before he had been there half an hour.' Mr. Outhwaite inquired: 'How many of your battalion would it take to do it?' Colonel Campbell replied: 'I would leave that task to myself, even though I have only one arm, having lost the use of the other in a task which the member for Hanley would not think of attempting or daring to risk,' a statement which naturally evoked loud cheers."

OLLIVER, SPENCER ALWYNNE, Lieut., was born in May, 1859, at Kingston Manor, near Worthing, son of George Olliver, D.L., of Kingston Manor, Sussex, and Fanny, daughter of John King, of Southampton. He was educated for the Navy at a preparatory school, and after that at the Naval School, Portsmouth; passed into the Britannia, and joined the Royal Navy in 1872, retiring as Lieutenant in 1882. He served in South Africa, 1900 and 1901, with the West Australian Mounted Rifles; resigned his commission in 1901, and joined Baden-Powell's South African Constabulary as Captain (commission dated 3 March, 1900). For his services in the South African War he received the two Medals and seven clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "S. A. Olliver, Lieut., West Australian Mounted Infantry. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by H.R.H. the Duke of Cornwall and York on his visit to Natal 14 Aug. 1901. Capt. Olliver died at Pretoria on 28 April, 1902, and an obituary notice describes the action for which he had been awarded the D.S.O.: "Capt. Spencer Alwynne Olliver, D.S.O., South African Constabulary, who died on 28 April, at Pretoria, of enteric, as has been announced, was the youngest son of the late George Olliver, D.L., of Kingston (Sussex). He was born in 1859, entered the Royal Navy, 1872, and retired as Lieutenant in 1882. Shortly after the outbreak of the war he joined the West Australian Mounted Rifles, in which he did gallant service; was mentioned in Despatches, and received the D.S.O. He was afterwards transferred to the S.A.C., in which he was serving at the time of his death, which occurred after he was pronounced out of danger and shortly expected home. The last fight with which Capt. Olliver was prominently connected was described by Reuter's correspondent as a smart engagement, which took place on 6 Feb., between a force of West Australians, Dragoon Guards and Cape Police, and Kruitsinger's Commando, in Cape Colony, about 15 miles from Klipplaat. The British force, numbering only 27 men all told, was under the command of Capt. Olliver, and was carrying Despatches. On drawing close to Featherstonehaugh's Farm, they sighted a small body of Boers. To the rear of the Boers was a fairly high kopje, and on this they fell back. Hot firing ensued, and the Boers, after being reinforced, executed a wide detour, and surrounded Capt. Olliver's little band. Just before sunset a body of Boers, estimated at 300, opened a terrific fire upon the two kopjes held by the British, and about 200 of their horsemen were seen to be charging the British position. Not one of the gallant band so heavily outnumbered thought of surrendering, but eventually they were all overpowered and captured. The Boers admitted five killed, one of whom was shot by Capt. Olliver at five yards distance. After being marched three miles under escort, and stripped of their arms and ammunition, the prisoners were released. The death of the gallant captain, at the end of the war, and after much laborious and distinguished service, is naturally a great blow to his relatives and friends." An obelisk was erected, inscribed as follows: "In memory of Sergt. John Jacobs, age 30 years, Private Samuel Chance, age 22 years, Private James Peck, age 22 years, 7th Dragoon Guards, who with 28 others under Capt. Olliver for seven hours kept at bay a force of over 400 of the King's enemies, and thus nobly died at Featherstonehaugh 6 Feb. 1901. This stone was erected by the residents of Klipplaat and vicinity." Capt. Olliver had married Sophy, daughter of Henry Duncan, Esq.

Spencer Alwynne Olliver.

CAMERON, GEORGE W., Capt., was born at Thurso, Quebec, Canada, son of John Archibald Cameron. He was educated at Woodstock College, Ontario, and began his military career in the 5th Royal Scots, the Highland Regt. of Montreal, in 1887, which he eventually commanded. He became Captain in 1891, and Major in 1897. He saw active service in the South African War as a Lieutenant in Lord Strathcona's Corps, taking part in the operations in Natal in May and June, 1900, and serving in the Orange River Colony and Transvaal till May, 1902. He was promoted to Captain in March, 1900, and received the Medal with clasps; was promoted Major in Dec. 1901, and Honorary Major in the Army in Sept. 1901, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "George W. Cameron, Capt., Lord Strathcona's Corps. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia, Warrant, etc., were sent to the Colonial Office for transmission to Canada 1 Nov. 1901, and presented by Lieut.-Colonel A. Roy 27 Nov. 1901. Lieut.-Colonel Cameron, who had latterly been on the permanent staff of the Canadian Mounted Artillery, was an enthusiastic rifleman, a keen supporter of cross-country riding, and fond of most outdoor sports. He died 28 Aug. 1907, in Winnipeg. In an obituary notice in the "Times" of 12 Sept. 1907, his name is given as George H. Cameron.

CARTWRIGHT, FRANCIS LENNOX, Captain, was born 27 March, 1874, fifth son of the late Right Hon. Sir R. J. Cartwright, G.C.M.G., P.C. He was educated at Bishop Ridley College; St. Catherine's, Canada, and Queen's University, Kingston, Canada; became Captain 14th Battn. Princess of Wales's Own Rifles, Canadian Militia, in 1896; joined the North-West Mounted Police in 1897; served in Yukon and N.W. Territories. He served in the South African War, 1899–1902, in Lord Strathcona's Horse, taking part in operations in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, 10 July to 29 Nov. 1900, including actions at Belfast (26 and 27 Aug.) and Lydenberg (5 to 8 Sept.); operations in the Transvaal, west of Pretoria, July to 29 Nov. 1900, including actions at Frederickstad (17 to 25 Oct.); operations in Orange River Colony 30 Nov. 1900, to 31 May, 1902. He received the Queen's Medal with four clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Francis Lennox Cartwright, Capt., Lord Strathcona's Horse. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia, Warrant, etc., were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa; returned by Lord Kitchener to be forwarded to the Governor-General, Canada; sent to Colonial Office for transmission to Canada, and presented by the Lieut.-Governor of the North-West Territories 29 Nov. 1901. He returned to N.W. Mounted Police, 1901; retired in 1904; became Captain, 5th Field Battery, Canadian Artillery, 1906; Captain, Strathcona's Horse (Royal Canadians), 1910; appointed Inspector N.W. Mounted Police, Canada. He served in the European War, 1914–16 and was given the Brevet of Major 1 July, 1915. He married, in 1901, Ada Maria Carlos, eldest daughter of Augustus F. Perkins, of Oak Dene, Holmwood, Surrey.

Archibald C. Macdonell.

MACDONELL, ARCHIBALD CAMERON, Capt., was born 6 Oct. 1864, at Windsor, Ontario, Canada. His father was the late Samuel Smith Macdonell, Q.C., LL.D., D.C.L., for many years

Lieutenant-Colonel Commanding the 2nd Essex Battn., Windsor, Ontario, youngest son of Colonel the Honourable Alexander Macdonell, of Collachie, Inverness-shire, Scotland, who belonged to a cadet family of Glengarry; was a United Empire Loyalist, and fought through the Revolutionary War of 1776 to 1783, and was Colonel and Assistant Paymaster-General during the war of 1812–14. He belonged to the 84th, "the Royal Highland Emigrant Regt.," in which his father was a Captain, and later to Butler's Rangers. The mother of Major-General Macdonell was Ellen Guillot Macdonell, eldest daughter of the late Colonel D. D. Brodhead, grandniece of Brigadier-General Daniel Brodhead, one of Washington's Brigadiers, and niece of Brigadier-General Thornton Brodhead, who was mortally wounded at the Second Battle of Bull's Run, whilst in command of the Michigan Cavalry Brigade. Major-General Macdonell was educated at Trinity College School, Port Hope, Canada, and at the Royal Military College of Canada, Kingston, Ontario, and on graduating from the last-named institution received a commission in the Royal Artillery. This, for family reasons, he resigned without actually joining. He became a Lieutenant in the Canadian Militia on 26 June, 1886, and joined the Regular Canadian Army as a Lieutenant in the Canadian Mounted Infantry, Permanent Corps of Canada, on 6 April, 1888. He exchanged into the Royal North-West Mounted Police in Sept. 1889, and was Adjutant of the whole force, and later was in command of C Division and the Battleford District. He volunteered into the 2nd Battn. Canadian Mounted Rifles for service in South Africa in Jan. 1900, as Captain, and was promoted Major in May, 1900. He went through the Boer lines on the night of 5–6 May, 1900, after the Battle of Vet River, in command of a composite squadron of four troops from C and D Squadrons of his battalion, and blew up the culvert behind the Boer lines, near Smaldeel, and cut the telegraph wires. He was dangerously wounded at Diamond Hill on 12 June, 1900, and was invalided home to Canada in July, 1901. He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Archibald Cameron Macdonell, Capt., Canadian Mounted Rifles. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He returned to South Africa in 1902, in command of the 5th or Western Regt., Canadian Mounted Rifles, and arrived at Durban just after the declaration of peace. He was mentioned in Despatches 16 April, 1901, and received the Queen's Medal with four clasps. He served in the Royal North-West Mounted Police until 5 March, 1907, when he was appointed Major, Second-in-Command of the Royal Canadian Mounted Rifles, now Lord Strathcona's Horse. He became Lieutenant-Colonel of his regiment on 1 April, 1912, and held the command until 22 Dec. 1915. He served throughout the European War, arriving in England with the First Canadian Contingents in Oct. 1914. He was present at Festubert, and at all the big battle, afterwards. He was promoted Colonel, Canadian Permanent Corps Service in May, 1916, and was Brigadier-General of the 7th Canadian Infantry Brigade from 23 Dec. 1915, to 8 June, 1917. On 17 Feb. 1917, he had his left arm broken by a bullet near the shoulder, and had another through the top of the shoulder, when caught in the open by a sniper. He resumed command of his brigade two months later, and was promoted Major-General on 9 June, 1917. He was created a Companion of St. Michael and St. George in the Honours Gazette of 29 Jan. 1916; a Companion of the Bath in the Honours Gazette of June, 1917, and a Knight Commander of the Bath in Jan. 1919. He was created an Officer of the Legion of Honour (France) in Nov. 1918, and awarded the Croix de Guerre of France in July, 1919. He was mentioned in Despatches no fewer than seven times, viz.: Jan. 1916; Jan. 1917; June, 1917; Jan. 1918; June, 1918; Jan. 1919, and July, 1919. He was formerly Captain of many Rugby and cricket teams, and played twice for Canada in the Western International Cricket Match against the United States. He has gone in a great deal for wolf-hunting with Long-dogs, Highland deer-hounds and Borzois in the North-West District. He is now Commandant of the Royal Military College of Canada, Kingston, Ontario. He was married at Winnipeg on 14 April, 1890, to Mary Maud Flora, third daughter of the late Lieut.-Colonel J. T. Campbell, sometime 72nd Highlanders and Royal Canadian Rifles, a Crimean Veteran (vide Campbells of Possil and Glendarnel). They had five children, of whom three, Jean, Maud and Alastair, died in infancy; one, Ian Cameron, born 11 March, 1895, Lieutenant, Lord Strathcona's Horse (Royal Canadians); Flying Officer, Royal Flying Corps, was killed in action on the Somme 2 July, 1916, and one, Alison Cameron, is still living.

MACKIE, ERNEST F., Capt., served in the South African War, 1900–1, as Adjutant, Lord Strathcona's Corps. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 8 Feb. and 16 April, 1901]; was awarded the Queen's Medal with four clasps, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Ernest F. Mackie, Capt., Lord Strathcona's Horse. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa; returned by Lord Kitchener, to be forwarded to the Governor-General of Canada 1 Nov. 1901; sent to Colonial Office for transmission to Canada, and presented by the Lieut.-Governor of Manitoba. He was promoted Captain 16 March, 1901; Major 1 April, 1912; has served in the European War, 1914–16, and was given the Brevet of Lieut.-Colonel 1 July, 1915.

KEENAN, CAMPBELL B., Surgeon-Lieut., was born in 1871, son of D. D. Keenan, of Ottawa. He served in the South African War, 1899–1901; was mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Campbell B. Keenan, Surgeon-Lieut., Lord Strathcona's Horse. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia, etc., were sent to the Commander-in-Chief, South Africa; returned to Lord Kitchener to be forwarded to the Governor-General of Canada, and sent to the Colonial Office for transmission to Canada. Presented by Lieut.-Colonel A. Roy. He was promoted Surgeon-Captain, Strathcona's Horse, 16 March, 1901. Lieut.-Colonel Keenan served in the European War from 1914.

PANET, HENRI ALEXANDRE, Capt., was born 24 July, 1869, son of the late Colonel Charles Eugene Panet. He graduated at the Royal Military College of Canada, and served in the South African War, 1899–1900, and was present at the Relief of Mafeking. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 16 April, 1901]; was given the Brevet of Major, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Henri Alexandre Panet, Captain, Royal Canadians. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented to him by the Commandant, Royal Military College, Canada. He was Staff Adjutant, Royal Military College of Canada, 1901–5; A.A.G., 1905–7; D.A.G., 1907–9. He was promoted to Colonel, Royal Canadian Horse Artillery; served in the European War; was wounded and mentioned in Despatches; became Brigadier-General; was created a C.M.G., 1916, and a C.B. in 1919. He married, in 1902, Mary A., youngest daughter of the late James Bermingham, of Kingston, Ontario, Canada.

CHRISTIE, ALBERT EDWARD, Lieut., was born 3 Dec. 1860, son of the late Charles Robertson Christie, of Toronto. He served in the North-West Rebellion in 1885. He again saw active service in South Africa in 1900, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: Albert Edward Christie, Lieut., Lord Strathcona's Corps. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia, etc., "were sent to Canada, and presented to him by Miss Wetmore, daughter of Judge Wetmore." He became Major, 16th Light Horse, and served in the European War with the Canadian Expeditionary Force. Major Christie married Mary Ludlow, daughter of Chief Justice Wetmore, and they have three sons and one daughter.

IRVING, LEWIS ERSKINE WENTWORTH, Lieut., was born in Hamilton, Canada, 16 Aug. 1868, fifth son of Sir Aemilius Irving, K.C., Treasurer of the Law Society of Upper Canada, who had fought at Waterloo (Medal), and of Augusta Louisa, daughter of Colonel Gugy, Quebec. He was educated at the Upper Canada College, Toronto, the McGill College, Montreal, and Trinity University, Toronto (M.D., C.M.); became Captain, Canadian Artillery, in 1891; Lieutenant, Royal Canadian Artillery, in 1899; served in the South African War in 1899, and took part in the advance from Beira to Mafeking, in the Rhodesian Field Force. He was mentioned in Despatches 16 April, 1901; received the Brevet of Major, 1901; Queen's Medal and four clasps, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Lewis Erskine Wentworth Irving, Lieut., Royal Canadian Artillery. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia, etc., were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa; returned by Lord Kitchener to be forwarded to the Governor-General of Canada, and sent to Colonial Office for transmission to Canada. He was placed on the Reserve of Officers 17 May, 1901. Major Irving served in the European War, 1914–18.

LECKIE, JOHN EDWARDS, Lieut., was born in Canada 19 Feb. 1872, son of Major R. G. Leckie, Sudbury, Ontario. He was educated at Lennoxville; graduated from the Royal Military College after four years' course; postgraduate course at King's College (B.Sc.); served in the South African War as Lieutenant (16 March, 1901), Lord Strathcona's Horse, and Captain, 2nd Canadian Mounted Rifles. He was mentioned in Despatches; received the Queen's Medal with five clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "John Edwards Leckie, Lieut., Lord Strathcona's Corps. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia, etc., were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, and presented by Major-General Stephenson at Friedrichstad 4 April, 1904. He became Captain, 72nd Seaforth Highlanders of Canada, and was promoted Major in the same regiment 30 Sept. 1913. He served throughout the European War from 1914, and commanded the 16th Battn. Canadian Scottish from 1915. He became Colonel, and was created a C.M.G. in 1917. Colonel Leckie is a mining engineer, and is a member of the Canadian Mining Institute and American Institute of Mining Engineers.

OGILVY, JOHN HERBERT CECIL, Lieut., served in the South African War with the Canadian Military Forces, and was transferred to the Gordon Highlanders. He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "John Herbert Cecil Ogilvy, Lieut., Royal Canadian Regt. (now Capt., Gordon Highlanders). In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, and thence to the G.O.C., Transvaal, and presented 25 July, 1901. Capt. Ogilvy died 19 Dec. 1901.

TURNER, R. E. W., Lieut., was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "R. E. W. Turner, Lieut., Royal Canadian Dragoons. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." Sir R. E. W. Turner was awarded the Victoria Cross (see V.C. Volume). The "Canadian Gazette" of 5 July, 1917, says: "The high place which that gallant war veteran, Major-General Sir Richard Turner, V.C., D.S.O., now holds in the Canadian Military organization was made evident to all at the Jubilee Service in Westminster Abbey. He and Sir George Perley, walking side by side, were the only Canadians in the royal procession as it made its way through the nave to the sanctuary. What Sir William Robertson is to the whole British forces, General

Turner is, in a sense, to the Canadian forces overseas. He holds the senior military appointment, and is chief military adviser to the Overseas Minister of Militia, Sir George Perley, who is, so to speak, the Lord Derby of the Canadian organization; while the post of Major-General Sir Arthur Currie, in command of the Canadian Army Corps, may be said to resemble in its lesser degree that of General Haig in command of the whole British Empire forces on the Western front." The "Canadian Gazette" account of Sir R. E. W. Turner says also that: "He went to the front early in the present war, and was in command of the Canadian Highland Brigade during the fighting at Langemarck, where 75 per cent. of the men engaged were killed, wounded, or taken prisoners. In the terrible fighting the Germans would have been able to break through at Langemarck had it not been for the courage and resourcefulness shown by the Canadian forces, including those led by General Turner and the officers and men under him."

CAPELL, ALGERNON ESSEX, Capt., was born at Tottenhall, near Wolverhampton, 1 Nov. 1869 (a member of the Essex family of Capell, direct line), and was educated at Felsted School. He joined the Cape Mounted Rifles as a trooper in 1889, and remained in the corps till 1899, when he joined Bethune's Mounted Infantry as Lieutenant, having served through Pondoland at the annexation. He served in the South African War, 1899–1902, and was promoted to Captain in 1900 "for gallantry in the field" at Scheeper's Nek. He joined the S.A.C. in 1900, and was promoted to Major in 1902; was mentioned in Despatches (twice by General Buller and once each by Lord Roberts and Lord Kitchener), and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Algernon Essex Capel, Capt., Bethune's Mounted Infantry. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia, etc., were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, and presented by the Duke of Cornwall and York 14 Aug. 1901. Major Capell was "ejected from the S.A.C. by the Boer Government of 1908." He was appointed Assistant District Commissioner, Dagoretti, British East Africa; Chief of Police, Grenada, 1910–12 (awarded King's Police Medal), and Assistant Commissioner, British South African Police, in Southern Rhodesia, since 1913. He served in the European War from 1914; commanded a column to German South-West Africa; captured Shuckmansburg, the capital of Caprivi Zippel strip of German territory; given command in Dec. 1914, of the 2nd Rhodesian Regt., with the rank of Lieut.-Colonel; was mentioned in Despatches by General Smuts, and received the Croix de Guerre. Major Capell has "devoted most of his life to big game and other shooting when on leave." He married, in 1903, Lois Ethel, daughter of W. Slatter, of Stratton, Cirencester, and they have one son and one daughter.

COLLOPY, C. J., Capt., served in the South African War, was mentioned in Despatches, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "C. J. Collopy, Capt., Bethune's Mounted Infantry. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were sent to South Africa, and presented by Colonel Monro, commanding Bethune's Mounted Infantry, on full-dress parade.

MINSHULL-FORD, F. J., Capt., served in the South African War, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "F. C. Minshull-Ford, Capt., Bethune's Mounted Infantry. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia, Warrant and Statutes were sent to Mrs. Minshull-Ford. Capt. Minshull-Ford had been killed in action 17 Oct. 1901.

PRIOR, MONTAGU, Lieut., served in the South African War, was slightly wounded, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Montagu Prior, Lieut., Bethune's Mounted Infantry. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia, etc., were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, and presented by Major-General Stephenson at Friedrichstad 4 April, 1904.

CHOLMONDELEY, HENRY REGINALD, Capt., was born 11 June, 1864, fourth son of the late Rev. the Hon. H. P. Cholmondeley. He served in South Africa in 1900, was mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "H. R. Cholmondeley, Capt., Brabant's Horse. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa. The Insignia, Warrant and Statutes were sent to the Commander-in-Chief, South Africa; sent to the G.O.C., Transvaal, and presented 1 Jan. 1902. Major Cholmondeley served in the European War in the 10th Battn. Devonshire Regt. He married, in 1903, Cordelia Mercy, daughter of the late James Cross Ormrod, of Wyrsdale Park, Garstang.

DOUGLAS, JAMES SHOLTO GORDON, Capt., was born at Walmer, Kent, 2 May, 1872, son of the late Admiral and Mrs. R. Gordon Douglas, of Seafield. He was educated at Ascham School, Bournemouth, and at the Royal Academy, Gosport, and joined the Cape Royal Riflemen in 1893. When the South African War began, he joined 1st Brabant's Horse in 1899, and was transferred to the South African Constabulary. He served in the South African War, 1899–1902; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 16 April, 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with four clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "James Sholto Gordon Douglas, Capt., South African Constabulary. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He was promoted to Major in 1902. He served with the South African Constabulary, with the Transvaal Police and the South African Police. He was appointed Deputy Commissioner in command of the South African Police, Johannesburg, from 1908, and became, during the European War, Lieut.-Colonel Commanding No. 8 Military District, Union of South Africa, 1915. Major Douglas married, in 1902, Mabel Kate, eldest daughter of Capt. J. O'Donnell, late 16th Lancers, and they have one son.

OGILVY, THE HONOURABLE LYULPH GILCHRIST STANLEY, Capt., was born at Airlie Lodge, Campden Hill, London, 25 June, 1861, son of David, 7th Earl of Airlie. He was educated at Winton House, Winchester, and Eton; was a subaltern, 2nd Lanark Militia; joined Brabant's Horse, 1899; promoted to Captain. He says: "I do not remember when I joined the Army. My rank at the time when I won the D.S.O. was Captain, I think, but I do not know exactly what it was. My last service was in 1914–15, Lieutenant, A.S.C., Scottish Horse. I do not know why I was given the D.S.O.; the reasons were not stated in any communication when the British Consul at Denver handed me the D.S.O. I was a Corporal in the 2nd U.S. Cavalry (Torrey's Rough Riders), in the Spanish-American War of 1898. I think I was mentioned in Despatches twice. Once, I know, as foreman on a mule ship, Huron, in charge of mules, New Orleans to Cape Town. Joined Brabant's Horse at Queenstown, South Africa, after delivering mules at Cape Town. First engagement, Dordrecht, others Labuscagne, Aliwal North. Went on relief to Wepener, surrounding movement, and surrender of Fouriesberg; thence to Kroonstad and Pretoria. At Belfast with Lord Roberts, to Machaderdorp, Davel's Kantoor; with General Stephenson (Essex) at Nielo Spruit. Back to Machaderdorp, where we were compelled to turn our horses over to General French, and back to Pretoria for new horses. Resigned and came home on account of my brother Lord Airlie's death at Diamond Hill, where he commanded the 12th Lancers. This was about Dec. 1900. Applied for another (commission) about Feb. 1901; after waiting a couple of months in London, and not receiving it, notified them that as they did not need me I would return to U.S. This was by no means a solitary case; it occurred to several people as strongly recommended as I was. I mention this for your information, as I was afterwards gazetted. Lord Roberts inquired about the matter, and on my explaining it, said I had done quite right in the matter. In every case I have found it only with difficulty one could press one's services on the War Office, even when they claim most bitterly that men are scarce. I repeat, however, that this is merely for your information, in case there should be any confusion in regard to that commission which, as I did no service, did not count. Please excuse this ill-typed letter; machines are strange to me, but my writing is even worse." He received the Queen's Medal with three clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "The Hon. Lyulph Gilchrist Stanley Ogilvy, Capt., Brabant's Horse. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He married, on 27 Aug. 1902, at Waterdale, Loneland, Colorado, U.S.A., Gertrude Edith Boothroyd, daughter of Philip Henry and Edith Boothroyd, and they had two children: Jack David Angus Ogilvy, born at La Lalle, Colorado, 18 June, 1903 (the boy is having a military training), and Blanche Edith Maude Ogilvy, who was born at La Lalle, Colorado, U.S.A., 27 Sept. 1905, and died 26 March, 1915.

Hon. L. G. S. Ogilvy.

PERKINS, ROBERT CLARK, Surgeon-Capt., was born on 8 May, 1864, son of Thomas Cooper Perkins and Jane Clark. He was educated at Wesley College, Dublin; is a Member of the Royal College of Surgeons and a Licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians. He served in the South African War, and became Surgeon-Captain in 1899. He was twice mentioned in Despatches, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Robert Clark Perkins, Surgeon-Capt., Brabant's Horse. For services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented to Capt. Perkins in South Africa; a public presentation being impracticable, they were handed to him at Heidelberg. He was appointed Medical Officer to the Swaziland Administration. He married Alice Eva Knox, on 22 Aug. 1894, and they had two children: Norah Kathleen Knox, and Arthur Desmond Knox, born 25 April, 1897. Capt. Perkins died 7 May, 1916, at Bremersdorp, Swaziland, South Africa. A newspaper cutting says: "We take the following obituary notice of the late Capt. Perkins, eldest son of the late Mr. T. C. Perkins, Farra, Killala, whose death we announced with deep regret some time ago, from the columns of the 'Lake Chrissie Chronicle' of 12 May: 'We deeply regret to announce the death on Sunday last of Capt. R. Clark Perkins, D.S.O., Resident Justice of the Peace for Bremersdorp, and formerly Principal Medical Officer for Swaziland. He was ill for a few days. He leaves a widow, son and daughter to whom we tender our most sincere sympathies. The funeral took place at Bremersdorp on Monday. About sixty persons were present to pay the last tribute of respect, including the acting Resident Commissioner, Major Gibson, D.S.O., Mr. Marwick, Mr. Warner and many other officials. The coffin was covered with the Union Jack and many wreaths. The Rev. C. C. Watts read the Burial Service. Capt. Perkins was one of the oldest officials in Swaziland, and came to the country with the S.A.C. in 1902 immediately after the Boer War, and has been officially connected with the Administration ever since. About three years ago his health broke down, and he was ordered to England for rest.

His health became sufficiently restored for him to resume active work, and Capt. Perkins returned to Swaziland, where he relinquished the post of Principal Medical Officer in Swaziland on his appointment as Resident Justice of the Peace at Bremersdorp. He gained his D.S.O. during the Boer War whilst serving with the C.M.R. at Wepener for attending wounded under fire. He took an energetic part in the organization of the Swaziland Contingent for service in South-West Africa, and his son, Desmond Perkins, went through the campaign with the corps, and is now in training at Sandhurst.' "

STEPHENSON, ERIC SEYMOUR, Lieut., was born 21 April, 1879, son of Ernest Percy Stephenson. He was educated at Eton, and served in South Africa with the Mounted Infantry, Brabant's Horse and the Gloucestershire Regt., 1899–1902, taking part in operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900, including the defence of Wepener. Operations in the Transvaal, west of Pretoria, July, to 29 Nov. 1900. Operations in Orange River Colony, May, to 29 Nov. 1900, including actions at Wittebergen (1 to 29 July). Operations in Cape Colony, south of Orange River, 1899–1900. Operations in Cape Colony, north of Orange River. Operations in the Transvaal 30 Nov. 1900, to Feb. 1901. TURNER, HENRY GORDON, Capt., was born in 1862, son of the Rev. J. Turner, of Mansfield-Woodhouse, Nottinghamshire. He served in the South African War, 1902, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Henry Gordon Turner, Capt., De Montmorency's Scouts. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, and presented by Colonel Long at Dordrecht 25 Dec. 1901. Capt. Turner married, in 1890, Mabel Eugene, daughter of Myles L. Formby. De Montmorency's Scouts were raised by Capt. the Hon. R. H. L. J. de Montmorency, V.C. Sir A. Conan Doyle, on page 158 of his "Great Boer War," says of him, when describing the doings of General Gatacre's small force while holding the district from Sterkstroom to East London unflinchingly: "Scouting and raiding expeditions, chiefly organized by Capt. de Montmorency—whose early death cut short the career of one who possessed every quality of a partisan leader—broke the monotony of inaction. On 23 Feb. 1900, General Gatacre sent out a force to reconnoitre the enemy's position at Stormberg. The incident is memorable as having been the cause of the death of Capt. de Montmorency, one of the most promising of the younger officers of the British Army. He had formed a corps of scouts, consisting originally of four men, but soon expanding to seventy or eighty. At the head of these men he confirmed the reputation for desperate valour which he had won in the Soudan, and added to it proofs of the energy and judgment which go to make a leader of light cavalry. In the course of the reconnaissance he ascended a small kopje, accompanied by three companions—Colonel Hoskier, a London Volunteer soldier; Vice, a civilian, and Sergt. Howe. 'They are right on the top of us,' he cried to his comrades as he reached the summit, and dropped next instant with a bullet through his heart. Hoskier was shot in five places, and Vice was mortally wounded, only Howe escaping. The rest of the scouts, being farther back, were able to get under cover and to keep up a fight until they were extricated by the remainder of the force. . . . De Montmorency had established a remarkable influence over his rough followers. To the end of the war they could not speak of him without tears in their eyes. When I asked Sergt. Howe why his Captain went almost alone up the hill, his answer was, 'Because the Captain knew no fear.' Byrne, his soldier servant (an Omdurman V.C., like his master) galloped madly off next morning with a saddled horse to bring back his Captain alive or dead, and had to be forcibly seized and restrained by our cavalry."

DRISCOLL, DANIEL PATRICK, Capt., was born in Burma 11 May, 1862, son of John Driscoll. He received instruction at school in Burma, but at an early age turned to Service in the Mercantile Marine. as Captain of Scouting Party, attached to the "Colonial Division," and later as Commander of Driscoll's Scouts, and, in 1901, as Column Commander (promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel). He was mentioned in Despatches twice; received the Queen's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Daniel Patrick Driscoll, Capt., Driscoll's Scouts. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia, Warrant and Statutes were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, and presented there. Driscoll's Scouts are often mentioned in the official "History of the War in South Africa" (compiled by General Sir F. Maurice, G.C.B., and published by Messrs. Hurst and Blackett). In Volume II. (pages 315–316) we are told that the Scouts (with three officers, 53 other ranks and 56 horses) were engaged in the defence of Wepener. On page 122 of Volume III. we read that "Sir L. Rundle took the Bethlehem Road with the following force: 4th Battn. and one company of the 11th Battn. Imperial Yeomanry, the 2nd and 79th Batteries, Royal Field Artillery, Driscoll's Scouts, 2nd Grenadier Guards, 2nd Scots Guards, 2nd East Yorkshire Regt., and, to complete the brigade, the 2nd Royal West Kent Regt. from Boye's (17th) Brigade." On 29 May, Sir L. Rundle fought the action at Biddulphs Berg. On 12 and 13 July, 1900, Driscoll's Scouts were still with Sir L. Rundle, and engaged in the chase after de Wet, and (after the escape of de Wet) in the attack on Slabbert's Nek. On the 25th Sir L. Rundle occupied Commando Nek; on the 26th, Fouriesburg, and on the 27th he engaged the enemy at Slaap Kranz. In the middle of Aug. 1901, Driscoll's Scouts formed part of the garrison at Harrismith. Lieut.-Colonel Driscoll was appointed Chief Executive Officer, Legion of Frontiersmen. He served in the European War from 1915, in command of the 25th Battn. Royal Fusiliers, with great distinction, and his genius of resource greatly contributed to victory achieved against heavy odds on more than one momentous occasion. Lieut.-Colonel Driscoll was mentioned in Despatches four times by General Smuts; was awarded the Croix de Guerre (May, 1917), and created a C.M.G. in 1919. Having been offered a grant of Government land in British East Africa, Colonel Driscoll decided to accept it, and resigning the command of the Legion of Frontiersmen, with which World-Force he had been associated for about twelve years, he sailed for East Africa early in Dec. 1919. Before his departure Colonel Driscoll was the recipient of many marks of esteem from the Legion as a whole, and also from separate units and individuals. Entertained at a farewell banquet a few days before his departure, Colonel Driscoll eulogized the high spirit distinguishing the Legion of Frontiersmen as a whole, and, in particular, the wonderful pluck, power of endurance, dash and bravery of those who had served throughout the campaign in East Africa, and he called upon all present to stick to the Legion as one of the finest organizations on earth.

Daniel Patrick Driscoll.

The receipt of the Warrant and Statutes was acknowledged by the officer's father, as Major Davies had left for South Africa. He was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, Imperial Light Horse Volunteers; was appointed President of the Transvaal Medical Council, and Surgeon to the Johannesburg Hospital. When the European War broke out in 1914 he raised the 2nd Imperial Light Horse, and was given command of it, serving throughout the German South-West African Campaign. He was in the action of Gibeon, and was wounded. He served in the Royal Army Medical Corps as Major, June, 1917, to April, 1919, and was appointed Surgeon Specialist to the General Military Hospital, Colchester. He married, in 1886, Florence, daughter of T. Dixon.

FOWLER, CHARLES HENRY, Capt., was born 13 July, 1869, son of Charles Henry Fowler, M.D. He was educated at Cheltenham College; and served in the South African War in 1900; was mentioned in Despatches, received the Queen's Medal with seven clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Charles Henry Fowler, Capt., Imperial Light Horse. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, and presented there. The decoration was awarded for Ladysmith. He became Captain, South African Constabulary.

NORMAND, PATRICK HILL, Lieut., was born 20 Feb. 1876, son of Patrick Hill Normand. He was educated at Fettes College, Edinburgh; joined the Imperial Light Horse, as Lieutenant, in 1899, at Maritzburg, Natal, and helped to form the regiment. He was present at the battle of Elandslaagte (wounded); in the Siege of Ladysmith; was wounded at Waggon Hill on 6 Jan.; went with General Mahon's Column to the Relief of Mafeking; took part in the advance on Barberton, with General French's Column. He became Deputy Governor, Transvaal Prisons Department, in 1903, and Governor in 1908. From May, 1917, to March, 1919, he served with the Expeditionary Force in France as Deputy Assistant Provost-Marshal. He was mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Patrick Hill Normand, Lieut., Imperial Light Horse. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." Capt. Normand married, in 1907, Matilda M. Marsh, and they have three sons.

FARRAR, GEORGE HERBERT, Capt., was born at Chatteris, Cambridgeshire, 17 June, 1859, son of the late Charles Farrar, M.D., and his wife, Helen (The Crescent Lodge, Bedford), daughter of John Howard. He was educated at the Modern School, Bedford, and on leaving school entered the engineering business of his uncle, Sir Frederick Howard, going in 1879 to South Africa, to the Port Elizabeth and East London Branches. Eight years later he and his brothers settled in Johannesburg, where, in a few years, he became one of the leading men in the mining industry of the Witwatersrand. His chief enterprise was the formation of the East Rand Proprietary Mines, of which he was Chairman from the inception of the undertaking until the day of his death. He was for some time a Member of the Legislative Assembly of the Transvaal and Leader of the Opposition. He was tried for treason and sentenced to death for his share in the Jameson Raid, but the sentence was remitted on payment of a fine of £25,000. When the South African War broke out, he raised two regiments of South African Horse, and was appointed Major, Kaffrarian Rifles, 1 Dec. 1900, and served in this campaign as Captain, and afterwards Major, Kaffrarian Rifles, and as Major on the Staff of the Colonial Division. He took part in the operations in the Orange Free State, including the Defence of Wepener; operations in the Transvaal, west of Pretoria, Aug. to Sept. 1900; operations in Orange River Colony, 1900, including actions at Wittebergen (1 to 29 July), and in Cape Colony, south of the Orange River. He was mentioned in Despatches, 16 April, 1901; received the Queen's Medal with four clasps, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "George Herbert Farrar, Capt., Kaffrarian Rifles. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." (The Insignia presented by the King.) He was knighted in 1902. After the conclusion of peace, in 1902, he took an active part in the work of reorganization, and when Responsible Government was granted to the Transvaal he was unanimously elected leader of the Progressive Party in the House of Assembly, in opposition to the Ministry of General Botha. In 1903 Sir George Farrar was elected President of the Witwatersrand Chamber of Mines, and he took a leading part in the negotiations which led up to the formation of the Union of South Africa. For his services in this matter he was created a Baronet 2 Feb. 1911, and he became M.P. for Georgetown, in the first Parliament of the Union of South Africa, 1910–11, but in Dec. 1911, the claims of business in connection with the East Rand Company compelled him to retire from political affairs in order to devote his whole time for the reorganization of that enterprise. When the European War broke out he was on a visit to England, and was about to join General Sir Hubert Hamilton's Staff with the Army in Belgium, but he was ordered by the authorities to South Africa on the day before he was to have left. He was appointed to General McKenzie's Force, with the rank of Colonel, and was despatched to German South-West Africa as Acting Assistant Quartermaster-General. He went to Luderitz Bay in advance of the main force, and was engaged in the organization of the base camp, and later had charge of the restoration of the railway and of providing the water supply to the force, an operation of the first importance in that country. On the 19th of May, 1915, he was returning from a tour of inspection when the motor trolley on which he was travelling collided with a construction train at Knibis, near Gibeon, in German South-West Africa. Sir George was fatally injured, and only lingered until the next morning. He was one of the best-known men in South Africa, and had contributed to the progress of that country by legislative work, and by attention to mining and agricultural enterprise. He married, on 3 June, 1893, at Johannesburg, Ella Mabel, daughter of the late Dr. Charles Waylen, I.M.S., and had six daughters: Helen Mabel; Muriel Frances; Gwendoline; Georgina Marjorie; Kathleen Elizabeth and Ella Marguerite. Lady Farrar lives at Chicheley Hall, Newport Pagnall, Bucks, and has a residence in South Africa, Bedford Farm, near Johannesburg, Transvaal.

FARRAR, JOHN PERCY, Capt., was born in 1857, son of the late Charles Farrar, M.D., and brother of the late Sir George Farrar. He served in the South African War of 1899–1902; received the Queen's Medal with four clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "John Percy Farrar, Capt., Kaffrarian Rifles. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were sent to South Africa, returned to England, and presented by the King. Capt. Farrar married, in 1886, Mary, daughter of F. Beswick, of Queenstown.

RICKMAN, WILLIAM EDWARD, Capt., was born in 1855, He served in the South African War, 1900–02; was mentioned in Despatches, awarded the Queen's Medal with three clasps, and the King's Medal with two clasps, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "William Edward Rickman, Capt., Kimberley Light Horse. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the King 29 Oct. 1901. Capt. Rickman married, in 1895, Margaret Menzies Haliburton.

HEBERDEN, GEORGE ALFRED, Capt., was born 27 April, 1860, son of the late Rev. George Heberden. He was educated at Malvern College; at Jesus College, Cambridge (B.A., Cantab., 1882), and at St. George's Hospital, London (M.R.C.S., England; L.R.C.P., London, 1888). He was District Commissioner of Predasdorp, 1888–89; Surgeon, Cape Government Railway, 1890–92; District Surgeon, Kenhardt, 1893–94; Barkly West, 1895. He served in the South African War, as Medical Officer to Mounted Forces during the Siege of Kimberley; was mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette 19 April, 1901]: "George Alfred Heberden, Surgeon-Captain (Medical Officer), Kimberley Light Horse. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, and presented by Colonel Garstin. Capt. Heberden married, in 1895, Winifred, daughter of the late Rev. Henry Cottam.

ANGEL, THOMAS LOMBARD, Capt., was born 10 Jan. 1867, son of John Angel, of Torquay, Devon. He was educated at St. Luke's, Torquay, and became a Mechanical Engineer. He served with the Kimberley Regt. in Bechuanaland (Medal and clasp). He again saw active service in the South African War, 1900–01, as Captain, Kimberley Cycle Corps, during the siege of that place. He was mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Thomas Lombard Angel, Capt., Kimberley Town Guard. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, and presented there. He served in the European War, 1914–15, as Captain in the Imperial Army, and was later invalided home, and became Assistant to the Colonel in Charge of Records, No. 6 District, Lichfield, and No. 10 District, Hounslow. Capt. Angel married (1st), Mabel, daughter of Charles Abbey, Sculptor, of Richmond, Surrey; and (2ndly), Agnes Dunlop, daughter of J. Carbery, M.D.

O'MEARA, BULKELEY ERNEST ADOLPHUS, Capt., was born at Umballa, India, 1 Feb. 1867, son of the late Alfred O'Meara, of St. Mark's, Simla, India. He was educated at Dulwich College, and at King's College School, Somerset House, London. He served as a trooper in the original Pioneer Force which annexed Rhodesia to the British Empire, 1889–91; was Surveyor in the De Beers Consolidated Mines, Limited, Kimberley. He served in the South African War, 1899–1901, in the Kimberley Town Guard; was transferred to the Intelligence Department in 1900, and was Intelligence Officer for Griqualand West, as far as Mafeking; was S.O.1 to Vryberg and Carnarvon Columns; Press Censor and Interpreter and Intelligence Officer at Oudtshoorn, under Acting Inspector-General Western. He was four times mentioned in Despatches, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Bulkeley Ernest Adolphus O'Meara, Capt., Kimberley Town Guard. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were sent to South Africa, and presented to him there. He was subsequently appointed Government Surveyor for the Cape and Transvaal Colonies, practising at Johannesburg. He was a keen sportsman, taking part in all kinds of South African sport, including big game shooting in the north. Capt. O'Meara died 31 Aug. 1916.

RICHARDS, SIDNEY, Capt., was educated at Cheltenham College. He served throughout the Siege of Kimberley, in the Kimberley Town Guard, during the South African War, 1899–1900, and for his services was mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Sidney Richards, Capt., Kimberley Town Guard. He joined the Victoria Rifles, late Duke of Edinburgh's Own Volunteer Rifles.

RAYNHAM, EUSTACE FREDERICK, Lieut., served in the South African War, 1900, and for his services received the Queen's Medal with clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Eustace Frederick Raynham, Lieut., Kimberley Town Guard. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia, etc., were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, and presented there. He became Secretary of the De Beers Consolidated Mines in 1917.

SMITH, JAMES ALEXANDER JONES, Major, served during the South African War, 1899–1901, in the Kimberley Regt., and for his services was mentioned in Despatches and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "James Alexander Jones Smith, Surgeon-Major, Kimberley Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, and presented there.

George H. Mills Richey.

RICHEY, GEORGE HENRY MILLS, Capt., was born at Woolwich 18 May, 1867, son of the late Capt. E. Mills Richey, R.A., City Marshal of London, and Eliza Louise, daughter of Alexander Luke, of Carsluke, Scotland. He served as a volunteer in Methuen's Horse, in the Bechuanaland Expedition, 1884–85; was in the 12th Royal Lancers in 1886, and the 2nd Dragoon Guards. He entered the Colonial Service in 1895, and went through the Matabele War of 1896, and the Mashona Campaign of 1897–98, and received the General Service South African Medal and clasp. He served in the South African War, 1899–1902, part of the time as Adjutant of Kitchener's Horse. During part of the South African War he was Chief of Police, Krugersdorp District, in 1900, and later on Staff Officer to Dean's Column, operating in the Cape Colony towards the end of the war. He served under Ian Hamilton in his march to Johannesburg and Pretoria. The Army List says that he took part in "the Relief of Kimberley. Operations in the Orange Free State, Feb., including operations at Paardeberg, and action at Dreifontein. Operations in the Transvaal, including action near Johannesburg." He was wounded at Waterval Drift in 1900, and at Houtnek in 1900. He was mentioned three times in Despatches; recommended for the Victoria Cross, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "George Henry Mills Richey, Capt., Kitchener's Horse. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The decoration was awarded "For gallantry in the field, and devotion to duty and good work."

The following is an extract from a letter written by Lieut.-Colonel Norton Legge, 20th Hussars, Commanding Kitchener's Horse, dated Pretoria, 10 Aug. 1900:

"Capt. George Richey served in the regiment under my command—first as a subaltern and afterwards as my Adjutant, for which position I selected him on the promotion of Major Congreve, V.C., and I have had many opportunities of noticing his exceptional ability. He was promoted Captain by request of General Broadwood, C.B., Commanding 2nd Cavalry Brigade, for a clever reconnaissance of the Boer position at Poplar Grove. He got by himself to within 800 yards of their main position, and succeeded in sketching it and locating their guns. For this service (which had important results) Lord Roberts personally complimented him. As my Adjutant he was ever ready for work, and he carried out his arduous duties to my entire satisfaction."

Major George Cookson, 16th Lancers, Commanding Kitchener's Horse, wrote:

"Capt. G. H. M. Richey was Adjutant of Kitchener's Horse, and was all through the fighting under General Ian Hamilton, with his Winburg Column; on three different occasions his name was sent in for gallant conduct in the field; on one occasion, when with an officer's patrol, he gave up his horse to a trooper who had had a fall and lost his own horse, and walked back under fire on foot."

From Major-General H. J. M. MacAndrew, C.B., D.S.O.:

"Capt. G. H. M. Richey served under me as a troop leader in D Squadron, Kitchener's Horse, for about one month, and until he was promoted to the appointment of Adjutant of the regiment. During the time Capt. Richey served under me I had the pleasure of bringing his gallant conduct in action to the notice of the Commanding Officer on three separate occasions, and I believe his services have been brought to the notice of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief."

He was subsequently promoted to Major. During the early part of the European War he was Second-in-Command of the 23rd Royal Fusiliers (1st Sportsman's), under Viscount Maitland. Lieut.-Colonel G. H. M. Richey later commanded the 4th East Lancashire Regt., British Expeditionary Force. He won many prizes in India for skill at arms. At Rawal Pindi in 1892 he won five first prizes, and two second at the Punjab Assault-at-Arms. He won the tent-pegging after 14 runs, four of which were at the peg sideways. All the pegs were "taken."

NESBITT, CHARLES WARREN, Capt., was born in 1866, son of the late Lieut.-Colonel R. A. Nesbitt. He served in the South African War, 1900–1, in command of Nesbitt's Horse. The Official "History of the War in South Africa" (compiled by Major-General Sir F. Maurice, K.C.B., and published by Messrs. Hurst and Blackett), says on page 415 of Volume I.: "Immediately on his arrival the Field-Marshal (Lord Roberts) strove to systematize and support the efforts of the many South African Colonists who were pressing to be allowed to take up arms in self-defence. Their embodiment had already been sanctioned by Sir R. Buller, and approved by the Home Government. Colonel Brabant's Corps was expanded into two regiments, and their leader appointed a Brigadier-General to command a Colonial division composed of his own two regiments (Brabant's Horse), the Cape Mounted Rifles, Kaffrarian Rifles, Border Horse and Queenstown Rifle Volunteers. Two new mounted corps, entitled Roberts's Horse and Kitchener's Horse, were raised, besides numerous local defence corps, such as Nesbitt's and Bayley's from the Eastern province, and Orpen's from the Hopetown district. Colonel C. P. Ridley, in charge of the Western line of communications, commanded the 2nd Mounted Infantry Brigade, made up by the 2nd, 4th, 6th and 8th Mounted Infantry Regiments, the City Imperial Volunteers, Queensland Mounted Infantry and Nesbitt's Horse." For his services in this campaign Capt. Nesbitt was mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Charles Warren Nesbitt, Capt., Nesbitt's Horse. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He died about 1903 or 1904.

KING, EDWARD REX, Capt., was born 13 Nov. 1869, son of W. King, J.P. Somerset, and Elizabeth, daughter of Dr. Mules, of Ilminster, Somerset. He was educated at Winchester, and was gazetted to the 3rd Battn. Royal Scots (1887–91). He went to America, engaged in the lumber business and in ranching in Minnesota, and returned to England in 1898. He sailed for South Africa 1 Jan. 1900; enlisted in Roberts's Horse; was given a commission 2 Feb. 1900; promoted to Captain 24 June, 1900; wounded 28 June, 1900. He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Edward Rex King, Capt., Roberts's Horse. In recognition of services during the recent operations in South Africa." Capt. King joined the South African Constabulary in 1901. In 1903 he was appointed Assistant Chief Secretary for Permits, Transvaal, and in the same year he became A.D.C. to the Lieut.-Governor, Transvaal.

ROSS, CHARLES, Lieut., was born at Orange, New South Wales, the son of Scotch parents. He was educated at Santa Clara College, California, and became a Scout in the U.S.A. Service (Ness Percy, Indian War, 1877; Bannock, Indian War, 1878; Ute, Indian War, 1879). He was Chief of Scouts for Colonel Otter's Column in the North-Western Rebellion, Canada, in 1885, and was several times mentioned in Despatches. He had eight years' service in the North-West Mounted Police, Canada. In the South African War he served in Roberts's Horse as Lieutenant from Jan. to April, 1900, and was three times mentioned in Despatches. He served under General Hulton in command of the 1st M.I. Scouts from May to Nov. 1900. Sir A. Conan Doyle describes (page 529) in "The Great Boer War" the campaign of Jan.–April, 1902. He tells us of a drive, sweeping backwards towards the Heilbron–Wolvehoek line, which "ended in the total capture of 147 of the enemy, who were picked out of holes, retrieved from amid the reeds of the river, called down out of trees, or otherwise collected. So thorough was the operation, that it is recorded that the angle which formed the apex of the drive was one drove of game upon the last day, all the many types of antelope which form one of the characteristics and charms of the country having been herded into it. More important even than the results of the drive was the discovery of one of De Wet's arsenals in a cave in the Vrede district. Half-way down a precipitous krantz, with its mouth covered by creepers, no writer of romance could have imagined a more fitting headquarters for a guerrilla chief. The find was made by Ross's Canadian Scouts, who celebrated Dominion Day by this most useful achievement. Forty wagon-loads of ammunition and supplies were taken out of the cave." He was mentioned in Despatches, and for his services at Sanna's Post was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Charles Ross, Lieut., Roberts's Horse. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented to him by the Duke of Cornwall and York 14 Aug. 1901. He was subsequently promoted to Major. Major Ross married, in 1889, Nellie Buchanan, a Canadian lady of Scotch descent.

TUCKER, S. N., Capt., was born at Kimberley, South Africa, 22 June, 1876, son of Henry Tucker, of Canterbury, England, and of Annie Cawood Cradock, Cape Colony. He was educated at Bedford, Cape Colony; was a Private in the Kimberley Rifles, 1891–95, and the same in the D.E.O.U.R., 1895–97. He was a Trooper (promoted to Corporal) in Plumer's Matabeleland Relief Force, 1896; Major, Watt's Column to Mashonaland, 1896;

Trooper, Mounted Company, D.E.O.U.R., Mashonaland Campaign, 1897; Clerk in the C.G. Railways and C.T. Harbour Board, 1897–99; Lieutenant, South African Light Horse, 1899; Captain, S.A.L. Horse, 1900; Captain, S.A. Constabulary, 1900. He served in the South African War, 1899–1900, and for services rendered in the S.A.L. Horse in Natal and the Eastern Transvaal was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "S. N. Tucker, Capt., South African Light Horse. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." Capt. Tucker was unmarried. He was killed 4 Feb. 1902.

BARKER, WILLIAM FRANK, Lieut., served in the South African War, in command of the South African Light Horse, 1900–1. He was present at the Relief of Ladysmith, including the operations on the Tugela Heights (14 to 27 Feb.); operations in Natal (March to June, 1900), including action at Belfast (26 and 27 Aug.). We get some interesting glimpses of the South African Light Horse in the Official "History of the War in South Africa," compiled by Major-General Sir Frederick Maurice, K.C.B., published by Messrs. Hurst and Blackett): "The calling out of colonial mounted corps, both in Cape Colony and Natal, is mentioned in Chapter I. and Chapter II. Mounted men were urgently needed by all the columns in process of preparation, but, adhering to his opinion that success in the relief of Ladysmith was a most crucial matter, Sir Redvers decided to despatch to Natal the first unit enlisted at Cape Town—the South African Light Horse. The first party of 'Light Horse' embarked at Cape Town for Natal on the 22nd Nov. In Natal itself two mounted corps, under the command of Major (local Lieut.-Colonel) A. W. Thorneycroft, Royal Scots Fusiliers, and Major (local Lieut.-Colonel) E. C. Bethune, 16th Lancers, were already being formed." On page 332 Sir F. Maurice says: "Sir Redvers Buller reached Durham on 25 Nov. . . . He spent a few days at Maritzburg in inspecting this advanced base of the Natal Army, and in directing preparations for the reception of a large number of wounded. He then pushed on to Frere, reaching that place on 6 Dec. The enemy's raiding columns had now retired across the Tugela, and by the 9th a well-equipped British force of all three arms was concentrated at Frere. The mounted brigade, commanded by Colonel the Earl of Dundonald, consisted of the Royal Dragoons, 13th Hussars, Thorneycroft's and Bethune's newly-raised regiments of mounted infantry, the South African Light Horse, also only just enlisted and brought round from Cape Town, a squadron of the Imperial Light Horse, detachments of the Natal Carbineers and Natal Police, and one company of British Mounted Infantry." At Colenso Lord Dundonald despatched the South African Light Horse, under Lieut.-Colonel the Hon. Julian Byng, to demonstrate against the southern slope of the Hlangwhane Mountain, which the mounted brigade was endeavouring to occupy, in order to assist the main attack on Colenso by a flank fire. The Boers, however, were found to be in full possession of the mountain, and the advance of the South African Light Horse against its southern slope was checked. The attack was eventually abandoned, as General Buller decided that "the occupation of Hlangwhane would be useless unless he had first forced the passage of the Tugela at Colenso, and of this he had already relinquished hope." He watched Capt. Reed's gallant attempt to save Long's guns, and, after its failure, rode through the extended battalions of the 2nd Brigade and decided that the men were exhausted. He decided to abandon the guns, and to withdraw the whole of his force to camp. Major-General Lyttelton and Lieut.-Colonel Parsons successfully covered the retreat of Hart's Brigade. Most of Hildyard's Brigade reached camp at 3.30 p.m. The Naval guns withdrew from Naval Gun Hill. "The order to retreat reached the officer commanding the mounted troops about noon. The brigade was still hotly engaged with the enemy, and its gradual disentanglement took nearly three hours. Colonel Thorneycroft was told by Lord Dundonald to fall back slowly along the Gomba Spruit, protecting the flank of the South African Light Horse. His retreat, which was covered by the 13th Hussars and three companies of the Royal Fusiliers, was a good deal harassed by the enemy, who crept up through the bush on the east and on the north. The well-directed fire of the 7th Battery checked this attempt at pursuit. Eventually Lord Dundonald succeeded in extricating his whole force safely, except a small section of two officers and sixteen men of the South African Light Horse, who were taken prisoners." Sir F. Maurice says that it was decided to recruit from the loyal population of South Africa, and he goes on to say: "Considerable use had been made of the patriotic spirit. Practically the whole of the Volunteer forces of the colony had been called out in the first phase of the war, and were still under arms. The good services of the South African Light Horse and of Brabant's Horse, raised respectively in the western and eastern province, showed that the time had now come to make fuller use of the admirable recruiting material that was available." In Jan. 1900, Lord Dundonald was ordered to occupy Springfield. "He improved his command of Potgieter's Drift by the capture of the ferry boat from under the very eyes of the enemy. The boat had been moored to the northern bank of the river, and though parties of Boers were to be seen riding down to it, some troopers of the South African Light Horse volunteered to swim across and capture it. The enemy detected the attempt, but the adventurous swimmers safely reached the boat, cut it adrift, and brought it rapidly back amid a shower of bullets." In the Spion Kop Campaign a patrol, under Major H. W. G. Graham, skilfully guided by the commander of the Natal Carbineers (Major D. McKenzie), surprised 300 Boers. He "sent back for his supports, the mounted infantry of the King's Royal Rifles and a squadron of the South African Light Horse, and these, hurrying into the firing line, soon assisted to overcome the resistance amongst the rocks of the outnumbered Boers, who rose to their feet and surrendered." On 20 Jan. Dundonald "set about the capture of Bastion Hill. This was easily effected at 2.50 p.m. by a dismounted squadron of the South African Light Horse, supported by Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry." The South African Light Horse took part in the capture of Cingolo and in the other operations before the relief of Ladysmith. Sir F. Maurice describes the part they took in the clearing of Northern Natal. "On 27 May Sir R. Buller sent two columns across the Buffalo. One consisting of the 11th (Wynne) Brigade, with two 4.7-in. and four 12-pr. Naval guns, and the South African Light Horse, under Hildyard, crossing by Wools Drift, marched on Utrecht on the 29th, and two days later received the surrender of the town." "General Buller . . . on 6 June . . . flung the South African Light Horse at Van Wyk's Hill, ousted the Boer piquets which held it, and despatched Major-General Talbot Coke with three battalions of the 10th Brigade and a battery to occupy it under Botha's direction, thus possessing himself of the command of the southern side of the mouth of Botha's Pass." "At 10 a.m., on 8 June, whilst all the artillery opened fire, the South African Light Horse moved from their bivouac at Yellowboom Farm straight upon Spitz Kop, which they occupied without fighting." Botha's Pass was next captured by Sir R. Buller, and "thus, with little loss, was effected the capture of Botha's Pass, and the road into the Orange Free State was opened. . . . On the 10th Sir R. Buller resumed the general advance, the South African Light Horse and 10th Brigade leading; the objective was a prominent hill situated near the junction of the Klip River and the Gansvlei Spruit. This was found to be occupied by the Boer rearguard, which was speedily driven off by the South African Light Horse and artillery. The former, pushing on into high ground beyond the Spruit, found another detachment of the enemy somewhat strongly posted, and a sharp engagement, in which a squadron of the 18th Hussars lent valuable assistance, was necessary to dislodge him." At the action at Alleman's Nek on 11 June, "to the South African Light Horse was entrusted the guardianship of the rear, by no means the least vulnerable portion of the force at this period." During the advance towards Komati Poort, at the occupation of Ermelo, "a fourteen-mile march on the 13th brought the column to the source of the Vaal river with no more opposition than an affair of patrols on the right, which cost the enemy four men and the South African Light Horse one man wounded." On 23 Aug. 1900, was fought the action at Geluk. A rocky ridge was first occupied, and "the South African Light Horse, who were working through rough ground beneath the southern end of the ridge, came upon a party who fired hotly with rifles and three guns, killing an officer and wounding another officer and two men." On 10 May, 1901, in the Orange River Colony, Lieut.-Colonel W. H. Williams had started from Springfontein and had been engaged in "a sharp affair fifteen miles south-west of Fauresmith, where two squadrons of the South African Light Horse killed and wounded three and captured fourteen burghers, including a noted Field-Cornet, Van der Merwe." About 16 Sept. Byng was moving up the Valsch towards Kronstadt. He had taken 81 prisoners, and the enemy had suffered a good deal, while his own losses had been small, "the heaviest in one day having been one killed and ten taken prisoners in an attack made by a commando under Liebenberg upon a party of South African Light Horse which was returning from a patrol to Klerksdorp." On the night of 2 Feb. 1902, Byng made a raid, and came on a party under Commandants Mears and Wessels. Byng at once attacked, and "after a close combat in which his South African Light Horse and Garratt's New Zealanders and Queensland Bushmen much distinguished themselves, recaptured the three guns lost at Tweefontein, taking, in addition, twenty-seven prisoners, including three officers, and six carts. Besides these, the Boers suffered the loss of some dozen killed and wounded, amongst the former being Wessels. Byng's casualties, in spite of, or perhaps because of, the determined nature of his attack, numbered but three." For his services in this campaign in command of the South African Light Horse, Lieut. Barker was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 8 Feb. 1901 (Sir R. H. Buller, 30 March and 9 Nov. 1900), and London Gazette, 16 April, 1901, and 25 April, 1902]. He received the Queen's Medal with six clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "William Frank Barker, Lieut., South African Light Horse. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa and presented there. He again saw active service during the Natal Native Rebellion of 1906 in command of the Transvaal Mounted Rifles; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 25 June, 1907], and created a C.M.G., 1907. He served in the European War from 1914 to 1918, and was given the honorary rank of Colonel.

TURNER, REGINALD, Lieut., was born in 1870, son of Frederick Turner, Surgeon, Buxton, He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, and served in the South African War, 1899–1901. He was mentioned three times in Despatches; awarded the Medal with six clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Reginald Turner, Lieut., South African Light Horse. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the King 3 June, 1901. He served in the European War; became Captain, Nottinghamshire and Derbyshire Regt., 6th Battn; Major, Royal Fusiliers, 9 Sept. 1914; went out to France as Second-in-Command; was wounded; mentioned three times in Despatches. As a mining engineer he has had experience of most goldfields of the world.

MARSDEN, GEORGE, Lieut., was born 9 Feb. 1874, son of the late Capt. Richard Marsden, R.N.R., J.P. He was educated at St. Paul's School, and joined the 3rd West Yorkshire Regt.; passed the School of Instruction, Chelsea; resigned his commission. He joined the Perth (Western Australian) Artillery; was employed on a special mission to inquire into the condition of the aborigines of Western Australia, 1896–97. He was appointed A.D.C. to the Governor of Western Australia (Sir Gerard Smith, K.C.M.G.); resigned in 1899, and in the same year joined the South African Light Horse. He served in the South African War of 1899–1902; was mentioned in Despatches three times, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]:

"George Marsden, Lieut., South African Light Horse. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa and presented in South Africa. He later joined the 4th Battn. The Cheshire Regt. Capt. Marsden married, in 1904, Julia, daughter of the late George Booker, and they had one daughter.

WICKHAM, THOMAS STRANGE, Lieut., was born 2 June, 1878, eldest son of R. W. Wickham, of Ebley Court, Stroud. He was educated at Marlborough, and served as a Trooper during the operations in South Africa. He served in the South African War as Lieutenant in the South African Light Horse, 1899–1902, being present at the Relief of Ladysmith, including operations on Tugela Heights (14 to 27 Feb.); operations in Natal, March to June 1900, including the action at Laing's Nek (6 to 9 June); operations in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, July to 29 Nov. 1900, including the action at Belfast (26 and 27 Aug.); operations in Orange River Colony, June, 1900; operations in the Transvaal 30 Nov. to 10 Dec. 1900; operations in Orange River Colony, Dec. 1900, to Feb. 1901. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 8 Feb., 16 April and 20 Aug. 1901, and 29 July, 1902]; received the Queen's Medal with six clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Thomas Strange Wickham, Lieut., South African Light Horse. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were sent to South Africa and presented by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales on the Horse Guards' Parade 1 July, 1902. He was gazetted to the Manchester Regt. as Second Lieutenant 14 Sept. 1901; became Lieutenant 12 Nov. 1902; was employed with the West African Field Force in Northern Nigeria in 1904 (Medal and clasp). He became Captain. He married, in 1905, Bertha, daughter of John Grieveson. Capt. Wickham served in the European War, and was killed in action in the Cameroons. His death was announced in a War Office Communiqué 10 Sept. 1914.

FARQUHAR, MOUBRAY GORE, Capt., was born in 1862, son of the late Admiral Sir Arthur Farquhar, K.C.B., and Ellen (who died in 1898), daughter of S. P. Rickman. He served with the B.S.A. Company's Forces in Matabeleland, 1893 (Medal) and in 1896 (clasp). He again saw active service in the South African War of 1899–1901; was mentioned in Despatches; received the Medal with seven clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Moubray Gore Farquhar, Capt., Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, and presented at Bulawayo. He became Lieut.-Colonel. Of Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry we are told, in the Official "History of the War in South Africa" (compiled by Major-General Sir F. Maurice, K.C.B., and published by Messrs. Hurst and Blackett) (page 206): "In Natal itself two mounted corps, under the command of Major (local Lieut.-Colonel) A. W. Thorneycroft, Royal Scots Fusiliers, and Major (local Lieut.-Colonel) E. C. Bethune, 16th Lancers, were already being formed." Elsewhere we read that the corps was raised at Maritzburg, and on page 332 that it formed part of the mounted brigade commanded by Colonel the Earl of Dundonald. Thorneycroft and his men were engaged in the attempt to capture Hlangwhane Mountain at the Battle of Colenso. In the retreat after Colenso, "Colonel Thorneycroft was told by Lord Dundonald to fall back slowly along the Gomba Spruit, protecting the flank of the South African Light Horse. His retreat, which was covered by the 13th Hussars and three companies of the Royal Fusiliers, was a good deal harassed by the enemy." In the Spion Kop Campaign a dismounted squadron of the South African Light Horse, supported by Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry, captured Bastion Hill. In the chapter on the capture and evacuation of Spion Kop, Sir F. Maurice says that when Woodgate attacked Spion Kop on 24 Jan. 1900, Thorneycroft offered his services as guide, and he was desired by Woodgate to take his men to the front and lead the column. Having climbed the hill and arrived at the edge of an open plateau, "Thorneycroft's men, who had been climbing in double files, halted, and having formed line, stole forward again over the crest with fixed bayonets, expectant of a volley which they had been previously ordered to receive by flinging themselves to the ground. Behind them, the Lancashire Fusiliers followed closely in column of double companies, single rank, about one hundred yards intervening between the companies. Suddenly a loud challenge, twice repeated in Dutch, rang out from the depths of the mist, followed by a burst of fire from a surprised Boer piquet, whose position was revealed by a line of dancing flashes from a dozen rifles. Flat upon the grass dropped the soldiers, and lay motionless in accordance with their orders, suffering few casualties, whilst the bullets whistled close above them for two or three minutes. Then when the magazines of the Mausers were nearly exhausted, and the fire slackened, the word was given, and the men, leaping to their feet, charged down upon the piquet, which disappeared into the protecting fog escaping with the loss of one man only. The rest of the Boer outposts upon the mountain, numbering some seventy men, vanished without offering opposition and undiscovered. Thus, at 4 a.m., by skill and good fortune, the summit of Spion Kop was almost bloodlessly delivered into our hands." Woodgate gave orders to entrench, which was done in the fog, and on very difficult ground, and when the mist lifted a little it was discovered that the entrenchments were wrongly placed. The Boers rallied and returned, and the fog began to disperse and disclosed Woodgate's position to the Boers. The troops, almost without cover, were almost surrounded by fire, and the Boer reinforcements arrived and began an enveloping movement. Woodgate was mortally wounded. The fight went on, watched by Buller through a telescope from Mount Alice. "Even at that distance, the energetic and courageous movements of a single officer—Thorneycroft—a man of great stature, were to be singled out from the swaying knots of figures," and General Buller suggested to Sir C. Warren that Thorneycroft should be put in command. The situation had, however, become very critical. The official and other histories of the war tell the story of the fighting, and of the final evacuation of the hill. "Never since Inkerman," says Sir A. Conan Doyle, in his "Great Boer War" (page 199), "had we so grim a soldiers' battle. The company officers were superb. . . . Grenfell, of Thorneycroft's, was shot, and exclaimed, 'That's all right. It's not much.' A second wound made him remark, 'I can get on all right.' The third killed him." And in the end (page 202, "Great Boer War"): "Thorneycroft saw the frightful havoc of one day, and he shrank from the thought of such another. 'Better six battalions safely down the hill than a mop up in the morning,' said he, and he gave the word to retire. One who had met the troops as they staggered down has told me how far they were from being routed. In mixed array, but steadily and in order, the long thin line trudged through the darkness. Their parched lips would not articulate, but they whispered 'Water! where is water?' as they toiled upon their way. At the bottom of the hill they formed into regiments once more, and marched back to the camp. In the morning the blood-spattered hill-top, with its piles of dead and of wounded, was in the hands of Botha and his men, whose valour and perseverance deserved the victory which they had won. There is no doubt now that at 3 a.m. of that morning Botha, knowing that the Rifles had carried Burger's position, regarded the affair as hopeless, and that no one was more astonished than he when he found, on the report of two scouts, that it was a victory and not a defeat which had come to him. How shall we sum up such an action save that it was a gallant attempt, gallantly carried out, and as gallantly met? On both sides the results of artillery fire during the war have been disappointing, but at Spion Kop beyond all question it was the Boer guns which won the action for them. So keen was the disappointment at home that there was a tendency to criticize the battle with some harshness, but it is difficult now, with the evidence at our command, to say what was left undone which could have altered the result. Had Thorneycroft known all that we know, he would have kept his grip upon the hill. On the face of it one finds it difficult to understand why so momentous a decision, upon which the whole operations depended, should have been left entirely to the judgment of one who in the morning had been a simple lieutenant-colonel. 'Where are the bosses?' cried a Fusilier, and the historian can only repeat the question." Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry took a prominent part in the Relief of Ladysmith. When Northern Natal was being cleared, Thorneycroft's men were once more to the fore, on 13 May, 1900, in the action at Helpmakaar, at Alleman's Nek and Laing's Nek. They took part also in the advance towards Komati Poort, and in the operations on the Johannesburg–Durban line. In the operations in the Orange River Colony they were engaged in the forcing of Springhaan Nek on 14 Dec. 1900, and thereafter we read a great deal of the doings of Thorneycroft, now in command of a column. On 20 Sept. 1901, Thorneycroft discovered, attacked and defeated the Boer leader, Kritzinger. Some of Thorneycroft's men were with Ternan when, in the course of his clearance of the vicinity of Bultfontein, he met with a reverse near Bultfontein 8 April, 1900. After this affair, which crippled Ternan for a time, he was ordered to Eensgevonden to refit. "This was effected," says Sir F. Maurice, in Volume IV. (page 489) of the Official History, "by 15 April, when, after escorting a convoy to Hoopstad, Ternan marched to Bothaville on the 23rd. Thence he despatched Thorneycroft's M.I. to rejoin the officer from whom this veteran corps took its name. Thorneycroft being now at Klerksdorp in command of a new column of Australians and New Zealanders. Three days later Thorneycroft took his force into Kroonstad, where it was broken up." For his services in the campaign Capt. Farquhar was mentioned in Despatches; received the Queen's Medal with seven clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "M. G. Farquhar, Capt., Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa and presented at Bulawayo.

HAMILTON, C., Capt., served in the South African War. He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "C. Hamilton, Capt., Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, and presented to Capt. Hamilton at Bulawayo.

VILLIERS, REGINALD HYDE, Lieut., was born 4 Aug. 1876, son of Frederick E. Villiers and Jane Isabella, eldest daughter of the late Douglas Baird, of Closeburn, Dumfries. He served in South Africa, 1899–1902; was twice mentioned in Despatches; received the Queen's Medal with six clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Reginald Hyde Villiers, Lieut., Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry (now Second Lieut., 12th Lancers). In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, and presented there. He became Lieutenant, 12th Lancers. He married Marianne Stockwell, and they have two sons and one daughter.

FORBES, GORDON STEWART DRUMMOND, Lieut., was born in 1868, son of the late General Sir J. Forbes, G.C.B., of Inverness. He was mining in South Africa (Johannesburg) in 1889–93; in Rhodesia as Managing Director of Companies, 1893–1900. He served through the Matabele War of 1896 on Colonel Plumer's Staff, and then on Colonel Spreckley's Staff at the Battle of Umyussa (Medal). In 1891 he visited the West Coast of Africa, and was for a time engaged in mining there. He served in the South African War, and, for gallantry at Spion Kop, was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Gordon Stewart Drummond Forbes, Lieut., Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented to him by the King 3 June, 1901. He lived in Rhodesia, and was Managing Director of Companies there, his favourite recreations being steeplechasing and hunting. He was a member of the Legislative Council, Rhodesia, and was created a C.M.G. in 1910. He served in the European War and died of wounds in France 21 May, 1915.

HOWARD, THOMAS WALTER JOHN WRIGHT, Lieut., was born at Sheen, Surrey, in 1865. He was educated at Winchester (and Middle Temple), and served in the Bechuanaland Border Police, and took part in the Matabele War in 1893. He volunteered to ascertain the fate of Alan Wilson's party, Shanghani River. In 1896 he served during the Matabele Rebellion (Despatches; Medal with clasp), and he joined Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry at the beginning of the Boer War, being dangerously wounded at Spior Kop, and, for gallantry in the field, was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "T. W. Howard, Lieut., Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia, Warrant and Statutes were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa and presented there." His Christian name was afterwards given correctly in the official records. He served in the Zululand Rebellion (Natal Decoration) in 1906. Capt. Howard is a Justice of the Peace. He married, in 1886, Lizzie Amelia (who died in 1905), daughter of G. Huddy.

PONSONBY, WILLIAM RANDALL, Lieut., was born in Aug. 1874, eldest surviving son of Colonel Justinian Gordon Ponsonby. He served in the South African War in Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry, and in the South African Constabulary, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "W. R. Ponsonby, Lieut., Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the King 29 Oct. 1901. He was gazetted to the 3rd Dragoon Guards and retired. Capt. Ponsonby married, in 1902, Lilian Patteson, daughter of the late Sir Patteson Nickalls and Florence, daughter of T. S. Womersley. He died 18 Jan. 1919.

William R. Ponsonby.

HYSLOP, J., Major, was born 3 March, 1856, son of Thomas Hyslop, Wood Park, Kirkcudbrightshire. He was educated at Hutton Hall, Edinburgh University, Berlin, Vienna and Munich (M.B., C.M., Edinburgh University). He was formerly Assistant Medical Officer, Border Counties Asylum, Melrose, and Assistant Physician, Royal Edinburgh Asylum, Morningside, He was delegate from the Natal Government to the Conference of South African States and Colonies on Plague, held at Pretoria in 1899. He served in the South African War, and took part in operations in Natal, 1899, including actions at Rietfontein and Lombard's Kop; defence of Ladysmith, including action of 6 Jan. 1900; operations in Natal, March to June, 1900, including action at Laing's Nek. Dated 23 April, 1901." The Insignia were presented to him by the Duke of Cornwall and York 14 Aug. 1901. Capt. Marker and the then Colonel Hubert Hamilton brought home Peace Despatches to the King at Windsor in June, 1902. He accompanied Lord Kitchener to India as A.D.C. (28 Nov. 1902, to 30 April, 1904]; became Major 29 Nov. 1903, and in 1904 proceeded to the Staff College, qualifying in the following year. For part of 1905 he was Private Secretary to Mr. Arnold Forster, Secretary of State for War, and he was later appointed A.D.C. to the Commander-in-Chief in India (5 Nov. 1905, to 27 Oct. 1906). From 1 April, 1908, to 12 June, 1910, he was G.S.O.2, Home Counties Division, Eastern Command; became Lieutenant-Colonel 11 March, 1911, and from March, 1912, to Nov. 1913, was in command of the 1st Battn. Coldstream Guards. He was A.Q.M.G., Aldershot Command, 29 Nov. 1913, to Aug. 1914; was promoted to Colonel 5 Aug. 1914, and accompanied the British Expeditionary Force to France as A.A. and Q.M.G., 1st Army Corps; served through the Retreat from Mons, the battles of the Aisne and the Marne; was twice mentioned in Sir John French's Despatches [London Gazette, 19 Oct. 1914, and 17 Feb. 1915], and was made an Officer of the Legion of Honour for his services during the retirement from Mons. Colonel Marker was hit by a shell on the 4th Nov. 1914, outside the reporting centre of the 1st Army Corps at Ypres, and died of his wounds at Boulogne on the 13th of the same month. He was buried at Gittisham, Honiton. He had married, on 21 Nov. 1906, at the Guards' Chapel, Wellington Barracks, Beatrice Minnie Shrieve, third daughter of Sir Thomas Jackson, Bart., and Amelia Lydia Dare, and they had one son, Richard Raymond Kitchener, born 18 June, 1908.

WILSON, HERBERT HAYDON, Capt., was born 14 Feb. 1875, youngest son of the late Sir Samuel Wilson, of Ercildoune, Victoria. He served in the South African War, 1900–1, with the Imperial Yeomanry, taking part in operations in the Orange Free State, April and May, 1900. Operations in the Transvaal, west of Pretoria, July to 29 Nov. 1900, including actions at Venterskroom (7 to 9 Aug.). Operations in Orange River Colony, May to July, 1900, including actions at Lindley (1 June) and Rhenoster River. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 23 April and 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with four clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 23 April, 1901]: Herbert Haydon Wilson, Capt., 3rd Battn. The Imperial Yeomanry. For gallantry in defence of posts in the Boer attack on Lichtenburg. Dated 6 March, 1901." The Insignia were presented to Capt. Wilson by the King 25 July, 1901. He became Honorary Captain in the Army in 1901. He served in the European War, and was killed in action on 11 April, 1917. An obituary notice says: "Capt. Herbert Wilson, D.S.O., late a Major in the Nottinghamshire Yeomanry, and attached to the Household Cavalry, is reported killed in action on 11 April. Capt. Wilson was the youngest son of the late Sir Samuel Wilson and Lady Wilson. He served with the Yeomanry during the Boer War, and his services were rewarded with the D.S.O. and the rank of a Captain in the Army. He was well known with the Quorn, Cottesmore and Belvoir Hounds in Leicestershire, where he resided for many years at Ashby Folville. In polo he was a prominent figure, and, indeed, was a member of the Hurlingham Committee, the governing body of the game in this country. He played for England against America in 1909, when we lost the Cup, and was one of the members of Capt. Hardress Lloyd's team which attempted to regain the trophy in America two years later. He was one of the famous Roehampton team which won the Champion Cup at Hurlingham in 1905 and 1906, and the Open Cup at Ranelagh in four successive seasons (1904-1907), while he assisted England on three occasions (1908, 1909 and 1911) to gain victories over Ireland in the annual international match. Of late years his summer residence was Lower Grove, Roehampton, adjacent to the polo ground. His eldest brother was Lieut.-Colonel Gordon Wilson, M.V.O., Royal Horse Guards, who was killed in action during the First Battle of Ypres; his second brother, Wilfred (of the Northumberland Yeomanry), lost his life during the South African War, in which campaign another brother, Clarence, attached to the 8th Hussars, was severely wounded." A memorial service for Capt. Wilson was held at Christ Church, Down Street, Piccadilly.

MAGNIAC, HUBERT, Capt., was the son of the late Charles Magniac, of Colworth, Bedfordshire, M.P. for Bedfordshire, and of the Hon. Augusta, daughter of the 1st Baron Castletown, of Upper Ossory. He was educated at Eton and Cambridge (1st Class History and Political Economy), and served in the South African War, 1899–1902; was twice mentioned in Despatches, received the Queen's Medal with three clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 23 April, 1901]: "Hubert Magniac, Capt., 15th Battn. the Imperial Yeomanry. For gallantry in defence of posts in the Boer attack on Modderfontein. Dated 31 Jan. 1901." The Insignia were presented to Major Magniac by the King 2 June, 1902. He died 24 March, 1909, and an obituary notice of him appeared in the "Times."

FRANKLAND, ARTHUR PELHAM, Lieut., was born at Dover 23 Dec. 1874, youngest son of Lieut.-Colonel Sir William Frankland, R.E., 9th Bart., of Thirkleby, and Lucy Ducarel, eldest daughter of Francis Adams, of Clifton. He was educated at Oxford Military College, and the Royal Military College, Sandhurst. He joined the Suffolk Regt. 21 Sept. 1895, as Second Lieutenant. He served in the South African War, 1899–1901, with the Suffolk Regt., on the Staff, attached General Hutton's and General Bethune's Columns (graded Staff Captain), 15 Aug. 1900, to 7 Aug. 1901; took part in operations in the Orange Free State, April to May, 1900. Operations in the Transvaal, including action at Pretoria. Operations in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, July to 29 Nov. 1900. Operations in Cape Colony, south of Orange River, 1899–1900. Operations in the Transvaal, 30 Nov. 1900, to Feb. 1901. Operations in Orange River Colony, March to May, 1901. Operations in Cape Colony, Feb. to March, 1901. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 23 April, 1901], received the Queen's Medal with five clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 23 April, 1901]: "Arthur Pelham Frankland, Lieut., the Suffolk Regt. For conduct of a convoy near Petrusberg. Dated 23 April, 1901." "His good disposition, pluck and coolness saved the convoy." (vide London Gazette, 23 April, 1901). The Insignia were presented to him by the King 25 July, 1901. He was specially promoted Captain, Lancashire Fusiliers, 5 Oct. 1901; appointed Captain, Reserve of Officers, Lancashire Fusiliers, on retirement, 21 July, 1906, and Temporary Major 19 Sept. 1914. During the European War he was employed in the Railway Transport Establishment, British Expeditionary Force, France, Sept. 1914, to Sept. 1916; became D.A.Q.M.G. 1 Nov. 1916; promoted Major, Reserve of Officers, 18 Jan. 1917. Is Chief Organizer for the West of England of its Agricultural Organization Society. He married, at Clungunford Church, Shropshire, 12 Oct. 1898, Margaret Annie Phœbe, daughter of C. C. Seton, and they have two children: Marion Annie Margaret and Rosalind Lucy Seton.

CLARKE, LANCELOT FOX, Major, was born 15 June, 1858. He served in the South African War, 1900–02, with the Victorian Imperial Regt., Rhodesian Field Force. O.C.N., Western Districts; and as Administrator, No. 13 Martial Law Area, Cape Colony District. He served in Command of 4th Victorian Mounted Rifles 23 Feb. to 23 June, 1901, and took part in operations in the Transvaal. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 23 April, 1901], received the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 23 April, 1901]: "Lancelot Fox Clarke, Major, Victorian Bushmen. For able command in operations against De Wet. Dated 23 April, 1901." The Insignia were presented to him in South Africa. He became Colonel, commanding the 91st Infantry (Tasmanian Rangers), Commonwealth Military Forces. Colonel Clarke married, in 1889, Marion (who died in 1906), daughter of John Young and widow of Arthur Gilbert.

WALKER, GEORGE HENRY, Capt., was born at Taranaki, New Zealand, in 1875. He served in South Africa, with the 4th New Zealand Rough Riders and the Colonial Light Horse, 1899–1901. On 6 March, 1901, "De La Rey" (says the official "History of the War in South Africa," Vol. IV., pages 134–135), "beset one of Babington's patrols at Geduld, within twenty miles of his Headquarters. The patrol, which was composed of men of the 1st Imperial Light Horse, was less than half the strength of the enemy, and had but one Vickers-Maxim, but it was well handled by Major C. J. Briggs (King's Dragoon Guards), and defended itself so resolutely that once more De La Rey had the mortification of seeing his men retire beaten from a field where all the odds had been in their favour. The Boers lost some two dozen killed and wounded; the British party two officers and five men killed, three officers and thirteen men wounded. Babington, coming up next day, drove the Boers still further northward, and on the 24th completed their rout by overtaking and capturing the whole of their guns, nine in number, including two 15-pounders, a Vickers-Maxim and six Maxims, all with ammunition complete; transport to the number of seventy-seven wagons and carts, and all the camp stuff, together with the escort of 140 men, on the banks of the Taaibosch Spruit. The action which brought this about was a model of pursuing tactics. The enemy continually took up strong rearguard positions, out of which Babington as constantly manœuvred them by vigorous threats at the flanks, withholding a powerful and menacing front until the defence had begun to dissolve under the lateral pressure. The result was a series of hasty retreats on the part of De La Rey's rearguard, soon degenerating into a rout which infected the whole force and hurried it in disorder from the field. This was a heavy blow to De La Rey." Capt. Walker was mentioned in Despatches, received the Queen's Medal with three clasps, the King's Medal with three clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 23 April, 1901]: "George Henry Walker, Capt., 4th New Zealand Rough Riders. For good service on the occasion of the capture of Boer guns by Major-General Babington's Column. Dated 23 April, 1901." The Insignia were presented to him by the Governor of New Zealand, 6 Sept. 1901. Capt. Walker became Commissioner of Police, Nigeria, and was given the King's Police Medal for good service in punishing and bringing to justice the murderers of Mr. James, Assistant Commissioner at Forcados, Nigeria.

LOGAN, EDWARD TOWNSHEND, Capt., was born at Valparaiso 6 Nov. 1865, son of Edward Logan, of West Kirby (latterly of Chester), and was educated at Westminster. He joined the Army 27 June, 1888, and served in the South African War, 1900–2, being present at operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900, including actions at Karee Siding, Vet River (5 to 6 May) and Zand River. Operations in the Transvaal in May and June, 1900, including actions near Johannesburg. He was employed with Mounted Infantry. On one occasion Capt. Logan conducted a very successful night march, which resulted in the capture of several Boer laagers near Kaffirs' Kraal, and at another time, while his company was acting as escort to an empty convoy, it was heavily attacked by the enemy a few miles out of Klerksdorp, on both flanks and in the rear, but the convoy and men were brought into Klerksdorp in safety with a loss of two men wounded. At another period during the operations (in Jan. 1901) towards Potchefstroom, Capt. Logan guarded the bridge at Nauenpoort, and he was commanding the company when in the following month they started out from Elands-

WILSON, LESLIE ORME, Lieut., was born in London 1 Aug. 1876, eldest son of the late Henry Wilson, of 3, Stanhope Street, Hyde Park, London, W., and of Ada Alexandrina Wilson (née Orme), of Orme Square, Bayswater, W. He was educated at St. Michael's, Westgate-on-Sea, and at St. Paul's School. He joined the Army as Second Lieutenant, Royal Marine Light Infantry, 1 Jan. 1895; promoted Lieutenant 1 Jan. 1896; served in the South African War, 1899–1900, as Adjutant, Naval Brigade; took part in the advance on Kimberley, including action at Magersfontein; operations in the Orange Free State, including operations at Zand River; operations in the Transvaal, including actions near Pretoria and Diamond Hill; operations in the Transvaal, including actions at Belfast; was seriously wounded on 26 Aug. 1900, at the action of Monument Hill; received pension for wounds. He was mentioned in Despatches; awarded the Queen's Medal and five clasps, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Leslie Orme Wilson, Lieut., Royal Marine Light Infantry. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by H.M. King Edward VII. He was A.D.C. to the Governor of New South Wales, 1903–9. He became Captain, Berkshire Royal Horse Artillery (Territorials); promoted Lieut.-Colonel, Royal Marines, and appointed to command Hawke Battn. 63rd Division, R.N.D. He served through operations in Gallipoli, 1914–15; was mentioned in Sir Ian Hamilton's Despatches, and created a C.M.G. Severely wounded at the action at Beaumont Hamel, on the Ancre, on 13 Nov. 1916, and invalided home. Passed unfit for further service, he held an appointment at the Admiralty from March, 1917, to Feb. 1916, when he as made Parliamentary Secretary to the War Cabinet. On re-election to Parliament at the General Election in Dec. 1918, he was included in the Coalition Government as Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Shipping, and has been Chairman of the National Maritime Board since 1919. He contested Poplar Division of Tower Hamlets as a Unionist in 1910, and was elected Member of Parliament for Reading, Berks, 13 Nov. 1913. He married, in London, 10 June, 1909, Winifred May, eldest daughter of Capt. Charles Smith, of Goderich, Sydney, New South Wales, and they have three children: Peter Leslie Orme, born 4 June, 1910; David Orme, born 18 March, 1913, and Majorie Leila, born 22 April, 1914.

SAUNDERS, FREDERICK JOHN, Lieut., was born at Peckham 18 Sept. 1876, fifth and youngest son of William Saunders, of Clevedon, Sydenham. He was educated at the Mercers' School, London. He was appointed to his first commission in the Royal Marine Light Infantry 1 Feb. 1895, and promoted Lieutenant in Jan. 1896. He was sent to China, where he joined the Powerful, and served with the Royal Marine Guard at Wei-hai-Wei in July, 1898. In 1899, on the outbreak of the Boer War, the Powerful was ordered to the Cape, and on 20 Oct. 1899, the first Naval Brigade was landed to defend Stormberg, Lieut. Saunders commanding a detachment. He fought in every action in which the brigade took part, including the Battles of Belmont, Graspan and Modder River (preceding the Relief of Kimberley), and at Paardeberg, where Lord Roberts defeated Cronje and decided the fate of Bloemfontein. He took part in Lord Roberts's march into Bloemfontein, acting as Adjutant, Naval Brigade. He advanced to Kronstad, was seized with enteric and invalided home. He was mentioned in Despatches 30 March, 1900; received the Queen's Medal with four clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: "Frederick John Saunders, Lieut., Royal Marine Light Infantry. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." An official despatch says that the decoration was awarded "for his gallant work at the Battle of Graspan, where he climbed to the top of a hill, gallantly leading his men all the time under a heavy fire" (Official Despatch). The Insignia were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, 29 Nov. 1900, and presented in South Africa 11 June, 1901. Being the tallest man in the Naval Brigade, he had some very narrow escapes; one bullet passed through his pocket-book, another through the magazine of the rifle he was firing (without exploding four live cartridges still remaining in the magazine); one went through his sleeve, another through his helmet, and yet another through his water-bottle. Before the close of the campaign, he was awarded the Queen's Medal, with clasps for Belmont, Modder River, Paardeberg and Bloemfontein, and also the King's Medal. He was promoted Captain in 1901. Lieut.-Colonel Saunders was appointed Naval Intelligence Officer at Singapore, 1909–12, and served on the Staff of the Royal Marine Light Infantry at Chatham, 1913–14. He was promoted Major, July, 1914. During the European War he served in Gallipoli as Brigade-Major of the 3rd Royal Marine Division, and was mentioned in General Monro's Despatches for distinguished service during the evacuation. On the transference of the Royal Naval Division to France in May, 1916, he was promoted Temporary Lieut.-Colonel in command of the 1st Anson Battn. He was killed in action from shell fire 12 Nov. 1916, after commanding his battalion with the utmost valour and distinction. His death occurred only the day before the date of Sir Douglas Haig's Despatches in which the gallantry of Lieut.-Colonel Saunders receives conspicuous mention. He married, 31 July, 1902, Muriel, only daughter of A. Maxwell Tod, of Walmer, Kent, and they had one son, Maxwell Pomeroy, born 29 Oct. 1903.

London Gazette, 11 June, 1901.—"War Office, 11 June, 1901. The King has been graciously pleased to give orders for the following appointment to the Distinguished Service Order. In recognition of the services of the undermentioned Officer during the recent operations in Ashanti."

FLETCHER, WILLIAM, Surgeon-Capt., was born 20 Feb. 1863. He served in West Africa, 1899, in the Expedition in the Central Division of the Niger Coast Protectorate (Medal with clasp); took part in the operations in West Africa, 1900; was slightly wounded, and mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 4 Dec. 1900], and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 11 June, 1901]: "William Fletcher, Surgeon-Capt., Militia Medical Staff Corps. In recognition of services during the operations in Ashanti." The Insignia were presented by the King 25 July, 1901. He served in South Nigeria, 1901–2, in the Aro Expedition (Despatches [London Gazette, 12 Sept. 1902]; Medal with clasp). Surgeon-Major W. Fletcher has retired. He married, in 1893, Evie Lawson, daughter of the Rev. A. Rodger.

O. B. B. Smith-Bingham.

London Gazette, 2 July, 1901.—"War Office, 2 July, 1901. The King has been graciously pleased to give orders for the following appointments to the Distinguished Service Order, in recognition of the services of the undermentioned Officers during the operations in South Africa."

SMITH-BINGHAM, OSWALD BUCKLEY BINGHAM, Capt., was born 7 Oct. 1868, second son of the late O. Smith-Bingham and of Mrs. Smith-Bingham. He was educated at Winchester, and joined the 3rd Prince of Wales's Dragoon Guards as Second Lieutenant 8 June, 1889; served in India, 1889–92; in South Africa, 1892–95; became Captain 30 Jan. 1898; served in the South African War, 1900–2; took part in operations in the Transvaal, May and July, 1901; Orange River Colony, Feb. 1901, to 31 May, 1902; Zululand Frontier of Natal, Sept. and Oct. 1901; Cape Colony, Feb. 1901. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 2 July, 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with five clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 2 July, 1901]: "Oswald Buckley Bingham Smith-Bingham, Capt., 3rd Dragoon Guards. For marked gallantry in the rearguard action on the 3rd June, 1901, near Vrede." The Insignia were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, and presented there. He was promoted Major, Dragoon Guards, 1 April, 1903; Lieut.-Colonel 2 July, 1912. He took part in the European War, 1914–17; was twice severely wounded, on 13 May, 1915, at Ypres, and on 27 Sept. 1915, at Loos; promoted Colonel 2 July, 1916, and created a C.M.G., 1916. Brigadier-General 28 Sept. 1917, and Inspector-General of Cavalry. He married, in 1903, Edythe Mary, second daughter of the late R. Turnstall Moore, of Stodalt, County Meath, Ireland, and they have three sons: Oswald Cyril, born 29 Jan. 1904; Arthur Turberville, born 28 March, 1906, and Denis Robert.

WHITE, JAMES ROBERT, Lieut., was born 22 May, 1879, son of the late Field-Marshal Sir George White and of Lady White, née Amy Baly. He was educated at Winchester. He served in the South African War, 1899–1902, as Lieutenant, Gordon Highlanders. He was present at Kimberley, including action at Magersfontein; took part in operations in the Orange Free State, including operations at Paardeberg; fought in actions at Poplar Grove; Dreifontein; Vet River; was present in the Transvaal, May and June, 1900, including actions near Johannesburg and Pretoria, July to 29 Nov. 1900; took part in operations in Cape Colony, March, 1901, and in the Orange River Colony, April to June, 1901; in operations in the Transvaal. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 2 July, 1901]; awarded the Queen's Medal and five clasps; King's Medal and two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 2 July, 1901]: "James Robert White, Lieut., The Gordon Highlanders. For having, when taken prisoner, owing to mistaking advancing Boers for British troops, and stripped, escaped from custody and run six miles, warning Colonel de Lisle, and advancing with him to relief of Major Sladen's force." The Insignia were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, and presented by Major Sladen, Officer Commanding 6th Regt. Mounted Infantry, about March, 1902. Details from letter from Capt. J. R. White: "Awarded Distinguished Service Order for bringing up relief to a detached force attacked by Boers, having found his way to main column after being taken prisoner and released by Boers." He resigned his commission in 1908, impressed with the truth of the Tolstoyan position. He says he has since been "identified with the Irish and Socialist Revolutionary movements, and is a convinced believer in Communist principles." Capt. White married, 24 April, 1907, Mercedes (Dolly), daughter of Alexander Mosley, partner in the banking firm of Thomas Mosley & Co., Gibraltar.

LANGLEY, EDGAR JOHN FLYNN, Lieut., was born 4 March, 1878, son of the late P. R. Langley. He served in the South African War, 1900–2, taking part in operations in the Transvaal in May and June, 1900, including actions near Johannesburg, Pretoria and Diamond Hill; operations in Orange River Colony; operations in Cape Colony, south of Orange River, 1900, including action at Colesberg. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 2 July, 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with five clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 2 July, 1901]: "Edgar John Flynn Langley, South Australian Mounted Infantry. For gallantry during the action with Major Sladen's force." In the same Gazette [2 July, 1901] it is announced that the Brevet of Lieut.-Colonel has been given to "Major J. R. F. Sladen, the East Yorkshire Regt., for seizing a large convoy with 200 men and gallantly defending the same, though attacked by superior numbers of the enemy for two hours." Sir A. Conan Doyle, in "The Great Boer War" (page 469), says that "Elliot's column had trekked during the month of May from Kroonstad to Harrismith, and then turning north, found itself upon that date near the hamlet of Reitz. Major Sladen, with 200 Mounted Infantry, when detached from the main body, came upon the track of a Boer convoy and ran it down. Over a hundred vehicles with forty-five prisoners were the fruits of their enterprise. Well satisfied with his morning's work, the British leader despatched a party of his men to convey the news to De Lisle, who was behind, while he established himself with his loot and his prisoners in a convenient kraal. Thence they had an excellent view of a large body of horsemen approaching them with scouts, flankers, and all military precautions. One warm-hearted officer seems actually to have sallied out to meet his comrades, and it was not till his greeting of them took the extreme form of handing over his rifle that the suspicion of danger entered the heads of his companions. But if there was some lack of wit, there was none of heart in Sladen and his men. With forty-five Boers to hold down, and 500 under Fourie, De Wet, and Delarey around them, the little band made rapid preparation for a desperate resistance; the prisoners were laid upon their faces, the men knocked loopholes in the mud walls of the kraal, and a blunt soldierly answer was returned to the demand for surrender. But it was a desperate business. The attackers were five to one, and the five were soldiers of De Wet, the hard-bitten veterans of a hundred encounters. The captured wagons in a long double row stretched out over the plain, and under this cover the Dutchmen swarmed up to the kraal. But the men who faced them were veterans also, and the defence made up for the disparity of numbers. With fine courage the Boers made their way up to the village and established themselves in the outlying huts; but the Mounted Infantry clung desperately to their position. Out of the few officers present Findlay was shot through the head, Moir and Cameron through the heart, and Strong through the stomach. It was a Waggon Hill upon a small scale, two dour lines of skirmishers emptying their rifles into each other at point-blank range. Once more, as at Bothaville, the British Mounted Infantry proved that when it came to a dogged pelting match they could stand punishment longer than their enemy. They suffered terribly. Fifty-one out of the little force were on the ground, and the survivors were not much more numerous than their prisoners. To the 1st Gordons, the 2nd Bedfords, the South Australians, and the New South Welshmen belongs the honour of this magnificent defence. For four hours the fierce battle raged, until at last the parched and powder-stained survivors breathed a prayer of thanks as they saw on the southern horizon the vanguard of De Lisle riding furiously to the rescue. For the last hour, since they had despaired of carrying the kraal, the Boers had busied themselves in removing their convoy; but now, for the second time in one day, the drivers found British rifles pointed at their heads, and the oxen were turned once more and brought back to those who had fought so hard to hold them. Twenty-eight killed and twenty-six wounded were the losses in this desperate affair. Of the Boers seventeen were left dead in front of the kraal, and the forty-five had not escaped from the bulldog grip which held them. There seems for some reason to have been no effective pursuit of the Boers, and the British column held on its way to Kroonstad." Major E. J. F. Langley became Second-in-Command, 13th Regt. Australian (Victoria) Cavalry. He served in the European War, 1914–17.

London Gazette, 5 July, 1901.—" War Office, 5 July, 1901. The King has been graciously pleased to give orders for the following appointment to the Distinguished Service Order, in recognition of the services of the undermentioned Officer during the operations in South Africa. To be a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order."

CAMPBELL, DUNCAN LORN, Second Lieut., was born 12 June, 1881, son of the late Major-General Lorn Campbell, C.B. He was educated at the United Services College, Westward Ho! and was gazetted to the Welsh Regt., serving in South Africa, 1900–1. He was mentioned in Despatches, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 5 July, 1901]: " Duncan Lorn Campbell, the Welsh Regt. For the defence of a train near Alkmaar, on the 20th May, 1901, with four men against 50 Boers at close quarters. Dated 20 May, 1901." Capt. D. L. Campbell served in the European War, 1914–17.

London Gazette, 19 April, 1901.—" War Office, 19 April, 1901. Memorandum.—The death of Capt. and Brevet Major His Highness Prince Christian Victor Albert Ludwig Ernst Anton of Schleswig-Holstein, G.C.B., G.C.V.O., occurred before the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa had forwarded the recommendation for the Distinguished Service Order, which, had he survived, would have been awarded to him by His Majesty, in recognition of his services during the campaign in South Africa, 1899–1900."

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN, HIS HIGHNESS CHRISTIAN VICTOR, PRINCE OF, Capt. and Brevet Major, was born on 14 April, 1867, at Windsor Castle, son of Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, K.G., G.C.V.O., General in the British Army, and grandson of Queen Victoria. He was educated at Wellington College; at Magdalen College, Oxford, and at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst. He joined the Army in Aug. 1888, as a Second Lieutenant in the King's Royal Rifles (60th Foot). He saw a great deal of active service. He was on General Elles's Staff, as his Orderly Officer, in the Black Mountain Expedition in Jan. 1891, and was mentioned in Despatches. In April of the same year he served in the Miranzai Expedition, under General Sir William Lockhart, with his battalion, the 1st King's Royal Rifles. He also took part in the second Black Mountain Expedition (Hazara), and served under Sir Francis Scott, in the Ashanti Expedition, being present at Koomassi when King Prempeh and the Queen-Mother made submission to the English Governor, Mr. Maxwell. He was promoted, and received the Brevet Majority in recognition of his services in India and Ashanti on 11 Dec. 1896. He took part in the South African War; and for his services in that campaign was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 19 April, 1901]: " His Highness Prince Christian Victor of Schleswig-Holstein, Capt. and Brevet Major, King's Royal Rifles." He was a Knight Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath and of the Royal Victorian Order, and had the Indian Frontier Medal, the Ashanti Expeditionary Medal, the Egyptian and Khedival Medal, the South African Medal, and two Jubilee Medals, and belonged to the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, as well as several foreign Orders. He was an excellent cricketer, and just failed to get his " Blue " at Oxford.

Prince Christian Victor.

A Memoir of Prince Christian Victor was written by T. Herbert Warren, M.A., President of Magdalen College, Oxford, entitled, " Christian Victor, The Story of a Young Soldier." The book brings clearly before us the picture of the clever yet painstaking and absolutely dependable boy who was Captain of the Wellington Eleven, and just missed his place in the Oxford Eleven by the skin of the teeth. He played cricket in every sense of the word, and his biographer says of him:

" The Prince did not want naturally for steadiness and solid qualities. Possibly some of his love of fair play, his cheery tolerance of all sorts and conditions of men, and good-tempered patience when luck was against him, may have been enhanced by the discipline of his favourite game. He certainly drew his own metaphors from it, as when he wrote from Natal, in the letter already quoted, 'The Boers played up awfully well in the first innings, but since then our own game has been improving.' "

A noticeable and delightful trait in Prince Christian Victor's character, was his objection to having anything given to him which he felt he had not fairly earned on his own merits. At school, at Oxford, at Sandhurst, and in the Army, he never wanted any favours or promotions which might come his way because he was Queen Victoria's grandson. He seems to have possessed much of the charm of manner, shrewdness, business capacity and sound common sense which distinguished his uncle King Edward VII.

A strong sense of religion, which was none the less real because he did not wear it on his sleeve, was with him throughout his life until his death in South Africa, when he died fortified indeed by the rites of the Church of England and the presence of many friends, but far away from the parents and sisters he loved so tenderly. He faced death with uncomplaining courage, as he had several times previously faced it on the battlefield, even amid the storm of shrapnel and hail of bullets at Colenso. For he would not be taken care of because he was a prince. As a boy at school he did not love reading, indeed, his father once wrote to his son's House Master, the Rev. C. W. Penny: " It is my constant complaint during the holidays that I never see him open a book. I trust, however, that he will try to do better when the great question is settled and regain the lost ground." " The great question " being whether Prince Christian Victor would attain his heart's desire, a place in the Wellington Eleven.

The Prince got his colours. The Eleven that year was made up as follows: M. H. Milner (Captain), C. E. F. Bunbury, P. N. Salmond, D. N. Pollock, E. P. Simpson, W. G. Raphael, A. C. M. Croome, F. A. Browning, G. N. Spiller, H.H. Prince Christian Victor and Hon. W. Cairns.

On 27 Aug. of the same year, he sent the following telegram to his father: " Balmoral, 1883, 27, 8. 9 p.m.—To-day shot fine stag with ten points, at one hundred and forty-three yards. The ball hit the right spot.—Christian Victor." By the end of the month he had shot thirty-one stags in thirteen days and two half-days' shooting.

He wrote about the same time to his old tutor, Mr. Bourdillon: " I never told you that I got into the XI. Second choice, or 8th in the entire order. I was deer-stalking at Balmoral for five weeks last holidays, and did very well. By the by, my cricket average was 18½ for 11 innings, twice not out, 168 runs highest score; 46 v. Marlborough. I hope very soon to be Head of the House, which means being made a prefect or monitor, and being in the VI.—With much love, believe me ever, your affectionate friend and pupil, Christian Victor."

And again, to his father: " I have not yet answered your letter, but this term I have so little time to write. I send you the 'Wellingtonian,' and you will see that I am 'in great form.' In the first match here (only a pick-up amongst ourselves) I made 50; for my house I have made 82, and got a new bat for it; for the school against C.C.C. I made 50 again, and got another new bat for that. Yesterday, against Kensington Park, I made 13 and 22 not out. . . . Charterhouse came here on 5 July, and another good match on 28 June. I have no more time, and so remain, etc."

On 1 and 2 July, 1885, he thus records one of the great school matches of the year, namely, that against Haileybury College: " Haileybury Match, at Wellington College; first day. We scored 173 first innings, myself 65; they, 115 for 7 wickets. Papa and Mr. Fisher came over." " Haileybury Match; second day. They made 131, and we 139; myself 21; they then made 116; we won by 60."

The Eleven of this year consisted of: H.H. Prince Christian Victor (Captain), A. Parker, E. W. Markham, B. M. N. Perkins, H. D. Hanbury, W. R. Collins, R. H. Pitcairn, A. L. Wood, R. W. Fox, C. Philcox and J. W. Watson.

Despite his disappointment when he narrowly missed getting his Cricket Blue, Prince Christian had a very happy time at Oxford, where he worked and played cricket as hard as ever.

His biographer says: " If the Prince did not find a place in the Oxford team, he was very successful in his cricket elsewhere. On 18 June (1887) he played for the Oxford Harlequins against Harrow School. The School Eleven then contained some players of great promise, since fulfilled, such as Mr. A. C. M'Laren and Mr. (now the Hon.) F. S. Jackson, but the Harlequins were too strong for them; Mr. E. F. S. Tylecote, as the Prince says, was in splendid form behind the sticks, and the Prince himself made 103, a long way the best score achieved in the match. In his next matches he made 46, 52, 83 not out; 68, 43, 32, 86, 46, 2, 13, 22 not out; 4, 13, 35; a remarkable series, giving an average of 45$\frac{2}{13}$ for fourteen innings. He was also very successful at the wickets and in bowling."

While a cadet at Sandhurst, Prince Christian came of age, and on his birthday was presented with the Freedom of the Borough of Windsor, in which he had been born. It was decided that he should join the 60th King's Royal Rifles. " He made their acquaintance by becoming their guest at Aldershot for a cricket match. They were, he says, very friendly, and welcomed him, 'because they say they want a wicket-keeper in the regiment.' "

On the 10th Oct. 1888, he joined his regiment at Aldershot, and in 1891 he was in India, and served in the Black Mountain Expedition as Orderly Officer to the G.O.C., General Elles, and was mentioned in Despatches 20 Oct. 1891: " Prince Christian Victor of Schleswig-Holstein was most zealous in the performance of all duties that fell to him, and takes great interest in his profession. On the battalion being ordered for service in the field elsewhere, he requested and obtained permission to rejoin it." He received the Medal and clasp. He was next to see active service in the Miranzai Expedition, under Sir William Lockhart. During this time he wrote to the Queen on a bit of paper, for which he apologized, and said he was limited to forty pounds of kit. The same day he sent his father instructions for a cricket match between Cumberland Lodge and the Household Brigade, which was to take place on the occasion of Prince and Princess Christian's silver wedding. The Prince specially impressed it on his father to find out if any of the 2nd Battn. of the 60th were at Aldershot, and to invite them, and also to have their band to play, as well as the Guards. "They play splendidly, and people are apt to forget that there are other bands and other regiments besides the Guards. The arrangements about the band had better be made with Lord Tewkesbury." Having disposed of the silver wedding, he remarks: "Here we have had a good fight and have shot a frightful lot of the enemy. . . . My Colour Sergeant was shot in the leg as I was talking to him. The enemy shot very well, and we lost a pretty good lot for a frontier war."

In another letter he says: "We have been pushing the enemy about all over the place. . . . The native troops are splendid. I think that the German officers would say that there are no troops in the world to touch our troops in India. I have never seen anything to touch them anywhere. Soldiering out here spoils one for soldiering in England. . . . I got a very kind letter and telegram from Grandmamma on my birthday. Will you explain that I shall not be able to write to her for her birthday till I can get some paper next week?" He received a clasp to his Medal for this expedition.

He arrived in London on 29 May, 1891, and at Buckingham Palace evidently found some note-paper, on which he wrote to the Queen: "I ought to have written and thanked you for your very kind letter of congratulation after our two actions of 17 and 20 April. We were indeed fortunate, and Sir William Lockhart has done wonders."

General Lockhart had written to the Governor-General, on 28 April, of Prince Christian: "His Highness is a very keen, promising soldier, much liked in his battalion. He has been engaged in every action hitherto."

From 16 June to 11 July, he played and watched cricket every available moment, could not go to a State concert because his uniform had not arrived, wrote some particulars in his diary about his parents' silver wedding, his sister's wedding, a garden-party, at which the German Emperor and Empress were present, and last, but not least, the cricket match which he had thought out during the Miranzai Expedition.

On 10 July he went to the Eton and Harrow Match, and on 11 July: "Wimbledon Review. I was galloping for Uncle Arthur. It was a great success. We all went to the Crystal Palace for dinner, where there were the most splendid fireworks."

Cricket took up most of his time till 15 Aug., and on 17 Aug. he went to Germany and brought back some music for his band. On the 18th he sailed for India. He had more cricket; was concerned in a match, "Ghazial v. The World," and had hopes of getting a leopard that was prowling round his hut. "He gave at this time a great deal of attention to shooting. Musketry appears in the diary every day for many days together."

He later wrote home a description of how he got his first bear, and in another letter of more bear and ibex shooting, of his successes among the natives as an amateur doctor. "His remedies were nervine for toothache, and Cockle's pills for everything. The latter he found had a moral as well as a medical effect on the Kashmiris." About this time he remarked with great pride that he calculated that he was living at the rate of three and sixpence a day!

In 1892 he accompanied the Isazai Expedition, under Sir William Lockhart.

In Nov. 1892, he wrote to the Queen: "I go down to Meerut on the 12th of next month for the Rifle Meeting, at which I am competing for the championship of India, and also am shooting in my regimental team for the Inter-Regimental Prize."

In 1893 he wrote home: "My score of 242 points in the musketry course has not been beaten, and so I believe I am the best in the regiment."

28 Feb.: "I have just bought a beautiful carpet from Amritsar; it was very cheap, about £13 in English money; you would pay about £35 in London for the same thing, and then could not be sure it was genuine."

On 14 Feb. he had written: "Four of us went out shooting here on Saturday, and got sixteen hares, thirteen partridges, two jackals, and one wild cat, which I was lucky enough to shoot." And on 13 March he stayed with a Mr. Armstrong, at Markham Grant, Dehra Dun, and gives an account of the shoot: There were five guns: Armstrong, two officers of the Gurkhas from Dehra, Maclachlan of his own regiment, and himself: "So far we have shot a sambur, thirteen cheetah, two pigs, a porcupine, and some twenty jungle fowl." He himself got the sambur and seven of the cheetah. "No easy matter shooting from an elephant in high grass. We tried to eat the porcupine; it ought to have tasted very good, but this one was horrid."

"5 March: My latest purchase has been two camels, which will be of the greatest use when we move to the hills, since it will cost me hardly anything to move my things, as you have to give the camels no food, and they only graze by the roadside."

On 24 June he comments on the loss of the Victoria. "People always say, why do these things happen to us? I always say the other nations don't dare to do the things we do, and run no risks. Sir George Tryon was, I believe, one of the best admirals we had."

"In this country," he remarks later, "musketry is looked upon as more important than drill, and I am sure it is, but, unfortunately, in England it is not of so much importance."

On 21 Aug.: "You'll be glad to hear that in a cricket match between my regiment and the Devonshire Regt. we made 531, out of which I made 205 myself."

22 Oct.: "We have played our last match, and I made 114 and 20, so that I have finished up the season as well as I began. I have made 1,362 runs in 24 innings."

He writes to the Queen, 22 Oct.: "The greater portion of our time is spent in musketry. . . . I am now responsible to the Colonel for the shooting, he having made it my special department. . . . I am also managing the band, and that gives me great enjoyment."

In the beginning of the year 1894, Prince Christian Victor, who had left the 1st Battn. at Peshawar, often wrote to the officers, but his chief correspondent was a non-commissioned officer, Mr. J. W. Dwane, a very remarkable man, who, about the time of the Prince's death, had risen to the rank of Major.

For a great part of this year he was in the Citadel at Dover, going to Hythe for some weeks in the spring for a course of musketry.

In 1895 he served in the Ashanti War, as extra A.D.C. to Sir Francis Scott. Prince Henry of Battenberg later obtained leave to go. "No two gentlemen," said Mr. Bennet Burleigh, "ever more quickly won golden opinions by their gentle manners than Prince Henry and Prince Christian Victor. They stuck to their duty, which they performed without the slightest fuss or grumbling." On 30 Jan. 1896, Prince Christian wrote home that he had just heard of Prince Henry's death. "I am so awfully sorry for poor Aunt Beatrice and those little children. It is very sad."

Sir Evelyn Wood wrote to the Queen: "Your Majesty would be much gratified by hearing the accounts given by the officers returning from Ashanti of your grandson, who is also a great favourite with them all."

For his services in the Ashanti Expedition he was honourably mentioned; received the Star, and later the Queen telegraphed to his mother that she had just signed his promotion and brevet Majority. The Prince explains his new position in a letter to his father: "I get two shillings a day more than a Captain. I wear the uniform of a Major. It can never happen to me now that I should be turned out on account of the age clause."

Of this provision for old age, Prince Christian Victor wrote to his old friend Dwane: "You will have seen by the time that this arrives that I have been promoted and also have been given a brevet Majority. I suppose it is a great job, but still I flatter myself that I am quite as much entitled to one as many others who have been given brevets before."

In 1897 he was at Aldershot, and saw a good deal of perhaps his greatest friend, a young lieutenant in the battalion, Mr. Dermot Blundell. He was in the Jubilee Procession in London; rode with the Queen at the Naval Review at Spithead, and was with his company in the great Military Review on Laffan's Plain on 1 July.

Prince Christian Victor served in the Nile Expedition in 1898. He went on the gunboats with Sir Colin Keppel. On 25 Aug. the Zaphir sank, and though all were safely landed, Prince Christian lost most of his personal possessions.

He wrote to the Queen on the 5th from Omdurman: "I lost all I possess except my sword and a change of underclothing and my blankets. . . . The battle on the 2nd was very exciting; my ship protected the right side of the Zariba, and we fired shell after shell into dense masses of Dervishes, and must have done fearful execution."

On 9 Dec. 1898, he was invested with the G.C.V.O. by the Queen at Windsor. For the Nile Expedition he had been mentioned in Despatches 30 Sept. 1898; received the Medal and the 4th Class Osmanieh. The University of Oxford gave him an honorary degree, an honour which he valued very much. From Dec. 1898, he was stationed in Ireland, where he made many friends. In 1899 he passed the Staff College. On 6 Oct. 1899, he started for South Africa, for what proved to be his last campaign.

On arrival at Cape Town he could not get through to join the 1st Battn. King's Royal Rifles at Ladysmith, so he went on Capt. Percy Scott's Staff. at Durban. Sir Percy Scott wrote of him after his death: "I wish now that I had kept his letters, as he was one of the few that believed in heavy long-range guns before the Boers taught us their value. He went to more than one General about heavy artillery, and wrote to me, 'They cannot see that Rail Head is practically our fighting position, and that we might bring up guns of any calibre we like.' Events afterwards showed how very true this was. At the final attack on Colenso we had one six-inch gun; at the first attack we might have had a dozen, which would very likely have changed it from defeat to victory. Prince Christian's strong point was to employ heavy artillery—'not a fire engine,' as he said to me—to attack men in an entrenched position. Events have demonstrated that he was quite correct."

In one of Prince Christian's letters, written from South Africa, he says: "One of the West York Reservists, a small baker in London, was shot through the leg. He got a friend to turn him over, and then fired 25 more shots, till he was hit again; he is doing well in hospital."

General Hildyard got Prince Christian appointed Assistant Staff Officer to the Brigade. His friend Mr. Dermot Blundell had arrived in Africa, came up to Frere with the 4th or Light Brigade, and found the Prince there on 6 Dec.

A week later, 13 Dec., both Brigades moved together to Chieveley, where everything was preparing for the grand movement and attack upon Colenso. The next day, the 14th, the Prince watched the naval guns bombarding the centre of the Boer position. His Brigade, the 2nd, was entrusted with the central portion of the attack, and made their way for the big road bridge crossing the Tugela, going, in fact, straight for Colenso village. In doing so they came under a very hot fire. The Prince, who was Staff Officer to General Hildyard, was employed in carrying messages both for him and for General Clery. Some attempt had been made, without his knowledge, to keep him from any special exposure, but, as a matter of fact, he was for a considerable time very much in the thick of the fight, but was never touched. His own account in one of his letters was as follows:

"I was with Clery and Buller, and got into an awfully hot corner near the guns; most people were killed or hit, but somehow, although the bullets were ploughing the ground up all round, neither I nor my pony was touched; a bit of shell grazed my pony's neck and a bullet passed over my wallets, but these were the nearest. Their shells did not burst properly. One officer remarked to me that it was a 'confoundedly hot corner,' and that 'pheasant shooting was not in it.' Tommy Atkins was splendid all day and did not mind the bullets one bit. Blundell was not under fire, but poor young Roberts was terribly shot, and died the next day, and was buried on Sunday."

General Hildyard, speaking of the Battle of Colenso, said of Prince Christian: "I had endeavoured to avoid placing him in any position of unnecessary exposure. But when next I saw the Prince he was right forward in an exposed position, to which Clery had accompanied Buller, who had ridden forward to try and get the remnants of his batteries, which had moved right up into effective fire, extricated. Happily, he was not hit, and was only quite pleased at his experience."

Later the 2nd Brigade made its way first to Pretorius' Farm, and later, under General Warren, to Trichardt's Drift. "In Warren's attack the Prince was on the left part of the line. The 1st Brigade also went by Trichardt's Drift, and were engaged in the action leading up to the assault on Spion Kop, in which the Light Brigade played what was an important, and might have been a still more important part, capturing one of the side spurs and endeavouring to draw off some of the fire which fell with such awful severity on the main plateaux; the Prince took no part, the force with which he was being held in reserve. After the abandonment of Spion Kop and the failure of the flanking movement, the whole force withdrew once more to the south of the Tugela, the Prince's Brigade going on to Spearman's Camp Farm, which they reached on 29 Jan."

About this time Prince Christian wrote: "The country is dreadfully difficult, unfordable rivers and high mountains. . . . I think this will do the Army no end of good, and will be an excellent preparation if ever we have a European War."

And again: "You really can't have any idea of the country. It's really impossible, like Switzerland, and with all the mountains made into fortresses."

After the failure of the attack on Vaalkrantz, Sir Redvers Buller ordered a retirement, via Springfield, to Chieveley. On Vaalkrantz the brigade had been under fire from three sides. The Prince wrote home: "We had a bad day at Vaalkrantz, under a cross shell-fire for fourteen hours: some came very close."

He was in the affairs at Cingolo and Monte Cristo, which paved the way for the capture of the Middleburg laager. Two days later Sir Charles Warren took Hlangwavé, and on the 22nd, at two in the morning, Sir Redvers Buller threw his troops across the Tugela, the 2nd Brigade taking part in the operation. That night Mr. Blundell was slightly wounded near the left eye with the splash of a bullet. He did not want to report himself wounded, but Prince Christian insisted that he should; saying: "Your eye may go wrong, and if you're not reported you won't get your doctor's bill paid, or any compensation." "Advice," said Mr. Blundell, "which turned out afterwards to be very sound."

Prince Christian said, when writing to King George (then Duke of York): "What we shall have to have in the Army are batteries of heavy ordnance shooting 10,000 yards; these will, of course, not be able to move rapidly; the Field Artillery will do this, as at present, but these heavy guns will come up later with the infantry; this is a point which this war has shown us to be necessary."

He spent his last birthday at Elandslaagte, his thirty-third, 14 April, 1900. On 19 April, Major-General Hildyard took over the 5th Division from Sir Charles Warren, and Prince Christian acted for some time as D.A.A.G. to the Division. General Hildyard followed the railway by Wessel's Nek and Waschbank.

He entered the Transvaal Territory on the 28th, at Buffalo River, spent a few days about Utrecht and Ingogo River; after that went back and was with Buller at the forcing of Botha's Pass, and with him marched round the Boer right to Allman's Nek. The capture of this position opened the gate into the Transvaal; Laing's Nek was secured, and the 5th Division occupied Volksrust, being the first Division of the Natal Army to enter and occupy a Transvaal town.

In Aug. Prince Christian was appointed an extra A.D.C. to Lord Roberts.

He was at Pretoria on 8 Oct., when he began his last letter home, which he ended up on the 10th: "I played cricket two days ago, and made 31 and 69. Unfortunately, the unaccustomed exertion has given me fever; but it is not bad, only about 100°. But I have had it two days, which is a bore." It turned out to be enteric.

On the 29th he was very weak, and the Rev. George H. Colbeck, Army chaplain, gave him by his own desire the Holy Communion just before he lost consciousness, Lord Roberts, Prince Francis of Teck, Lord Stanley, and his doctors and nurses being present. On the 29th he died. The Prince had always told his mother he did not want to be brought home if he died on active service, and he was buried on All Saints' Day at Pretoria. His great friend, Mr. Blundell, only arrived in time to attend his funeral. Lords Roberts and Kitchener were present, and so was Prince Francis of Teck, and eight Generals were the pall-bearers: Kelly, Brabazon, Wood, Marshall, Maxwell, Inigo Jones, Baden-Powell and Surgeon-General Wilson, while Colonel Campbell and the officers of the 1st Battn. King's Royal Rifles headed the mourners.

One of the most touching accounts of the funeral was written in Germany by the war correspondent of the Austrian "Neue Freie Presse."

The news of Prince Christian Victor's death was a crushing blow to his family. Queen Victoria had been optimistic to the last—and she heard of his death at Balmoral on the afternoon of the 29th. London was at the moment celebrating the return of the City Imperial Volunteers. The Queen kept back the mournful news until the evening, when, in a message to the Lord Mayor congratulating the city and its brave sons on their return and speaking of those who had fallen, Her Majesty announced to them her own bereavement in the words: "I, alas, have to grieve for the loss of a dear and most gallant grandson, who, like so many of your companions, has served and died for his Queen and country."

London Gazette, 26 July, 1901.—"War Office, 26 July, 1901. The King has been graciously pleased to give orders for the following appointments to the Distinguished Service Order, in recognition of the services of the undermentioned Officers during the recent operations in South Africa."

SHAW, CECIL ARTHUR, Lieut., was born 10 June, 1870. He entered the 7th Dragoon Guards 28 March, 1900. He served in the South African War, 1899–1902. He was present at operations east of Pretoria, Sept. to Nov. 1900; in the Orange River Colony, Aug. to Sept. 1900; in the Transvaal, Dec. 1900; in the Orange River Colony, Feb. 1901, to May, 1902; on the Zululand Frontier of Natal in Oct. 1901. Operations in Cape Colony, Dec. 1900, to Feb. 1901. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 26 July, 1901]; awarded the Queen's Medal and two clasps; the King's Medal and two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 July, 1901]: "Cecil Arthur Shaw, Lieut., 7th Dragoon Guards. For good service in the capture of Steyn's following at Reitz." On this occasion Broadwood, with a small British column, surprised the Boers in the town of Reitz on 11 July, 1901, and captured nearly every member of the late Government of the Free State except Steyn, whom, of course, they most wanted. The column was made up of 200 Yeomen, 200 of the 7th Dragoon Guards and two guns. The raiders started at 11 at night; rode hard all night, and raced into the sleeping village at dawn, seizing the startled Boers as they rushed from their houses. Steyn, however, mounted his horse and escaped half-clad out of the town. Two Boer Generals, two commandants, Steyn's brother, his secretary and several other officials were, however, captured, and the Boer Treasury was also secured. The Insignia of the Distinguished Service Order were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, and there presented to Lieut. Shaw. He had been promoted to Lieutenant 22 Jan. 1901, and became Captain, 9th Lancers, 10 Jan. 1906. He was employed with the South Rhodesian Volunteers from 30 Oct. 1907. Capt. Shaw was appointed Brigade-Major, 1st Reserve Cavalry Brigade, and served in the European War. He married, in 1915, Sylvia, only daughter of the late Mr. de Grasse Fox.

EDWARDS, HUBERT DE BURGH, Second Lieut., was born 24 June, 1880. He served in the South African War; was mentioned in Despatches; received the Queen's Medal with four clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 July, 1901]: "Hubert de Burgh Edwards, Second Lieut., Royal Welsh Fusiliers. For surrounding and attacking at night a party of Boers with fourteen men, killing four and taking four prisoners." The Insignia were presented to him by the King 17 Dec. 1901. He was promoted to Lieutenant, and retired from the Army.

London Gazette, 25 July, 1901.—"War Office, 24 July, 1901. The King has been graciously pleased to give orders for the following appointments to the Distinguished Service Order, in recognition of the services of the undermentioned Officers during the recent operations in China. Except where otherwise stated, their rewards will bear date of 29 Nov. 1900. To be Companions of the Distinguished Service Order."

ELDERTON, FERDINAND HALFORD, Commander, was born 25 Jan. 1865, son of the late Capt. E. H. P. Elderton, 26th Cameronians. He was educated at Leamington College, and served at Suakin, 1885 (Medal and clasp; Khedive's Star). As Lieutenant he commanded the R.I.M. river gunboat Pagan in the Upper Burma Expedition of 1892–93 (Medal and clasp for Chin Hills). He served in China, 1900–1, as Senior Marine and Principal Transport Officer; was twice mentioned in Despatches; received the Medal with clasp (Peking), and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 25 July, 1901]: "Ferdinand Halford Elderton, Commander, Indian Marine. In recognition of services during the recent operations in China." The Insignia were sent to the India Office 28 Sept. 1901, and were presented by Major-General Creagh, at Tientsin, China, 7 Nov. 1901. He was gazetted Commander, R.N., 1 Sept. 1914; was sent on Special Duties to Antwerp, on the Antwerp Mission, 2 Sept. 1914; was appointed Naval Transport Officer, Marseilles, 8 Sept. 1914; Naval Transport Officer, 15 June, 1915; promoted to Captain, R.N., and Divisional Naval Transport Officer, Rouen, May, 1916 (Despatches); Senior Naval Transport Officer, Rouen, April, 1917. Capt. Elderton married, in 1901, Ada Alice, eldest daughter of A. M. Eckford, of Chifoo, China, and they have one son and one daughter.

JOHNSON, FRANK ERNEST, Major, was born 29 Jan. 1861. He joined the Royal Artillery, as Lieutenant, 27 July, 1880, and was promoted Captain 15 Feb. 1889, and Major 30 Sept. 1898. He served on the North-West Frontier, 1897–98; with the Mohmand Field and Tirah Expeditionary Forces, and received Medal with two clasps. He again saw active service in China, 1900; was present at the Relief of Peking, taking part in the actions of Peitsang and Yangtsun; he was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 14 May, 1901]; he received Medal with clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 25 July, 1901]: "Frank Ernest Johnson, Major, Royal Artillery. In recognition of services during the recent operations in China." The Insignia were sent to the G.O.C., Hong-Kong, 26 Sept. 1901; forwarded by him to the G.O.C., British Contingent, China Field Force, for presentation; sent on to the G.O.C., Madras, and finally presented by the G.O.C., Bangalore District, 1 Jan. 1902. He was promoted Lieutenant-Colonel 20 Dec. 1905; received the Brevet of Colonel 20 Dec. 1908, and became Colonel 20 Dec. 1910. He held the temporary rank of Brigadier-General 13 Oct. 1911, commanding R.A. India; became A.Q.M.G., India 17 May, 1911. He served during the European War; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 17 Feb. 1915, and 1 Jan. 1916], and created C.M.G., 1915, and C.S.I., 1919. He became Temporary Major-General 9 Oct. 1915, to 12 June, 1916, and was Temporary Inspector to the Royal Horse and Royal Field Artillery. Colonel Johnson married, in 1903, Alexa, eldest daughter of Sir W. Macpherson, Judge of the High Court, Calcutta, India.

PEREIRA, GEORGE EDWARD, Major, was born 26 Jan. 1865, son of Edward and the Hon. Margaret Pereira. He was educated at the Oratory School, Edgbaston, Birmingham, and was gazetted Second Lieutenant, Grenadier Guards, 10 May, 1882. He was employed on Home Service, 1884 to 1899; attached to Chinese Regt. till 1900. He was promoted Captain 4 Nov. 1896, and Major 2 May, 1900. He served in China in 1900 (was slightly wounded); mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 6 Nov. 1900]. He received Medal with clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 25 July, 1901]: "George Edward Pereira, Major, Grenadier Guards. In recognition of services during the recent operations in China." The Insignia were sent direct to Major Pereira 25 Feb. 1902. He again saw active service in South Africa, 1902; served during operations in the Transvaal and Cape Colony, May, 1902, and received Queen's Medal with three clasps. During the Russo-Japanese War, 1905, was attached to the Japanese Army in Manchuria; received the Japanese War Medal and Order of the Rising Sun (4th Class), and was created C.M.G., being Military Attaché, Peking, from 1905 to 1910. He retired from the Grenadier Guards 17 July, 1909, and was placed in the Reserve of Officers 17 Sept. 1913. He served during the European War, and was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 1 Jan. 1916; 15 June, 1916, and 4 Jan. 1917]. Major Pereira received the Brevet of Colonel in the Reserve of Officers, June, 1916, and was created C.B., 1917, and was given the honorary rank of Brigadier-General 21 March, 1919.

PHILIPPS, IVOR, Capt., was born 9 Sept. 1861, second son of the late Canon Sir J. Erasmus Philipps, 12th Bart., of Picton, and the Hon. Mary Margaret, daughter of the Hon. Samuel Best and sister of the 4th Lord Wynford. He was educated at Felsted School, Essex; served in the Royal Wilts Militia, 1881–83; became Lieutenant in Manchester Regt. 12 May, 1883; transferred to 5th Gurkha Rifles, Indian Army, Oct. 1884; served in the Burma Campaign, 1887–89 (Medal and two clasps); as Commandant of Military Police Battn., and in Chin-Lushai Expedition, 1889. He passed the Staff College, 1894–95; was promoted Captain 12 May, 1894. He served in the Miranzai Expedition, 1891 (Clasp); Isazai Expedition, 1892; on the North-West Frontier of India, 1897–98 (Medal and two clasps). In recognition of services during the operations in China." He was promoted Major, 5th Gurkha Rifles, 10 July, 1901; retired from Regular Army 20 July, 1903. He joined Pembroke Yeomanry in 1903, as Second-in-Command, Major and Hon. Lieutenant-Colonel. Sir Ivor Philipps was elected M.P. (Liberal) for Southampton, Jan. 1906, Jan. 1910, Dec. 1910, and Jan. 1919; commanded the Pembroke Yeomanry, 1908–12. On the outbreak of the European War he joined the War Office, G.S.O.2; became Brigadier-General, 115th Brigade, Nov. 1914; Major-General Commanding 38th Welsh Division, Jan. 1915, which division he raised and took to France in Dec. 1915. He was present in command of the division at the Battle of the Somme in July, 1916. He was created a K.C.B. in 1917. In July, 1915, he was appointed Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Munitions of War, which appointment he vacated to rejoin his division on its departure for France. He has taken active interest in local government as Alderman, Pembrokeshire County Council; as Chairman, Main Roads Committee, and as Chairman of the County Council. He is a Knight of Grace of Order of St. John of Jerusalem. Is a J.P. for the county of Pembroke, and for the town and county of Haverfordwest. Is a Deputy Lieutenant and Vice-Lieutenant for the county of Pembroke. Sir I. Philipps wrote "The Issue of Orders in the Field." He married, in 1891, Marian Isobel, daughter of the late James Buchanan Mirrlees, of Redlands, Glasgow, and they have one daughter.

GRIFFIN, CECIL PENDER GRIFFITH, Capt., was born at Parkhurst 22 Jan. 1864, son of the late Colonel C. Griffin, who commanded the Sherwood Foresters. He was educated at Wellington College, and at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and joined the Royal Dublin Fusiliers 7 Feb. 1885, becoming Lieutenant, Worcestershire Regt., 5 Aug. 1885, and Indian Staff Corps, 14 July, 1886. He became Captain 7 Feb. 1896. He served on the North-West Frontier of India, 1898 (Medal and clasps). In China in 1900 he was present at the Relief of Peking and at the actions of Peitsang and Yangtsun; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 14 May, 1901], received the Medal and clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 25 July, 1901]: "Cecil Pender Griffith Griffin, Capt., Indian Staff Corps. In recognition of services during the recent operations in China." The Insignia were presented to him by the King 29 Oct. 1901. He was promoted to Major 7 Feb. 1903, and to Lieutenant-Colonel 7 Feb. 1911; and retired 1 March, 1912. On the outbreak of the European War in 1914 he rejoined the 1st Lancers, and was wounded. Lieut.-Colonel Griffin holds the Silver Medal of the Royal Humane Society (1893). He married, at Plymouth, Annie, only daughter of E. James, and they have a son, C. S. J. Griffin (Captain, Gordon Highlanders), and a daughter, Evelyn Griffin.

PELL, BEAUCHAMP TYNDALL, Capt., was born 6 July, 1866, youngest son of the late Rev. Beauchamp Pell, Rector of Ickenham, Middlesex, and was educated at Wellington College, where his deeds of daring and love of natural history made him conspicuous; and at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, where he gained distinction as an athlete. He was gazetted Second Lieutenant in the Queen's Regt. 14 Sept. 1887, becoming Lieutenant 7 May, 1890. From Dec. 1890, to Nov. 1894, he was Adjutant, Queen's Regt. He served on the North-West Frontier of India, 1897–98, with the Malakand Field, Mohmand Field and Tirah Expeditionary Forces. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 18 March, 1898], and received the Medal and two clasps. He served in China in 1900, as A.D.C. to Sir A. Gaselee, 26 June, 1900, to 20 July, 1901; was present at the Relief of Peking, actions of Peitsang and Yangtsun. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 14 May, 1901], received the Medal with clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 25 July, 1901]: "Beauchamp Tyndall Pell, Capt., Royal West Surrey Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in Pekin." The Insignia were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa 18 Jan. 1902, and privately presented at Pretoria. He served in South Africa, 1901–2, on the Staff, and as Assistant Provost-Marshal in the early part of 1902, receiving the Queen's Medal with five clasps. From Nov. 1902, to April, 1905, he was A.D.C. to different General Officers in India, and from April, 1905, to June, 1908, he was D.A.A.G. of one of the brigades of the Meerut Division and Assistant Military Secretary to the General Officer commanding the Northern Army there. He was promoted to Major in Sept. 1906. In 1912 he became G.S.O.3, at the War Office, being advanced to the 2nd Grade in April, 1913. In Sept. 1914, he succeeded to the command of the 1st Battn. the Queen's. Lieut.-Colonel Pell had only held the command a month when he was reported wounded and missing. It was subsequently ascertained that he was badly wounded at Gheluvelt, in the First Battle of Ypres, on the morning of 31 Oct. 1914; that, owing to heavy shell fire, it was impossible to move him while it was daylight, and that in the afternoon he, with other wounded, was captured by the Germans. Some weeks afterwards news was received that he had been taken to the Field Hospital of the 15th Army Corps at Werwick, Belgium, and that an operation had had to be performed, which, unhappily, did not save his life. He died on 14 Nov. 1914. In "The First Seven Divisions" (published by Messrs. Hutchinson), Lord Ernest Hamilton says, in his account of the action at Gheluvelt, on page 258: "The shell fire had been mainly focused on the 3rd and 22nd Brigades in the neighbourhood of Gheluvelt. By the association of these two Brigades, the 1st and 2nd Battns. of the Queen's (Royal West Surrey Regt.) for the first time in history found themselves fighting side by side. The occasion was an historic one, but not without a strong note of tragedy, both battalions being in the direct track of the bombardment and suffering very severely. Each battalion, too, lost its C.O. during the morning, Colonel Pell of the 1st Battn. being killed and Colonel Coles of the 2nd Battn. wounded." This, of course, is not quite correct, as Colonel Pell did not die of his wounds until later.

ROWCROFT, ERNEST CAVE, Capt., was born 6 Oct. 1866, son of Major-General G. C. Rowcroft. He was educated at Eastbourne and Sandhurst. He joined the Indian Service Corps, and was promoted Captain 5 Feb. 1898. London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901.—"War Office, 10 Sept. 1901. The King has been graciously pleased to give orders for the following appointments to the Distinguished Service Order, in recognition of the services of the following Officers during recent operations in South Africa."

DAMANT, FREDERICK HUGH, Major, was born in the District of King William's Town, South Africa, in 1864, youngest son of Hugh Atherstone Damant. He served in South Africa, 1899–1904, in the famous corps commanded by Major M. F. Rimington (now Major-General Rimington, C.B., C.V.O.), known as Rimington's Guides, and later as Damant's Horse. In any history of the South African War the doings of Rimington's Guides are related at considerable length, and the official record of General Rimington's services as given in the Army List gives some faint idea of the extent of his services and of the services of his Guides: "South African War, 1899–1902. Special Service Officer, and in command Rimington's Guides. Advance on Kimberley, including action at Enslin. Afterwards in command of a column from 6 May, 1901. Despatches [London Gazette, 4 May, 1900; 8 Feb. 1901 (Lord Roberts, 31 March, 1900; Sir A. Hunter, 4 Aug. 1900)], and Despatches [London Gazette, 16 April, 1901; 17 Jan. and 29 July, 1902]; Brevet of Colonel; Queen's Medal with eight clasps, King's Medal with two clasps; created a C.B." Major Damant served during the Siege of Kimberley, in command of a mounted section of the Town Guard Station at Otto's Kopje. After the Relief of Kimberley he served with Rimington's Guides, and in 1901 was appointed to command them. In the same year the name of the Guides was changed to Damant's Horse. Shortly afterwards Major Damant commanded a column in the Orange Free State, and was promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel. In a desperate struggle with 800 Boers he received five bullet wounds, but succeeded in saving the guns entrusted to his charge; later he took part in operations in the Western Transvaal until the cessation of hostilities. Sir A. Conan Doyle tells us at length ("The Great Boer War," pages 511–512) about Damant's desperate encounter with 800 Boers. A portion of De Wet's force had been harassing the block-house builders, and three bodies, under Damant, Rimington and Wilson, were at once despatched to clear away the enemy. The British line had become extended over many miles, and was dangerously weak in the centre, where "Colonel Damant and his small staff were alone with the two guns and the Maxim, save for a handful of Imperial Yeomanry (91st), who acted as escort to the guns. Across the face of this small force there rode a body of men in khaki uniforms, keeping British formation, and actually firing bogus volleys from time to time in the direction of some distant Boers." Damant and his staff seem to have mistaken these Boers for some of Rimington's men. In a few minutes the enemy were over the kopje where the guns stood, and had ridden among the gunners, supported in their attack by a flank fire from a number of dismounted riflemen. As soon as Damant, his Staff and the escort of forty Yeomen realized the danger, they dashed for the crest of the kopje, but the Boers had already overwhelmed the gunners. In the ensuing conflict Damant was hit in five places, "all of his Staff were wounded, and hardly a man of the small body of Yeomanry was left standing. Nothing could exceed their gallantry. Gaussen, their Captain, fell at their head. On the ridge the men about the guns were nearly all killed or wounded. Of the gun detachment only two men remained, both of them hit, and Jeffcoat, their dying Captain, bequeathed them fifty pounds each in a will drawn up on the spot. In half an hour the centre of the British line had been absolutely annihilated." However, the wide spread British wings had begun to realize that something was wrong An officer on the far right brought up his squadron and Scott's squadron of Damant's Horse to the rescue. Rimington's men came up, on the other side, and the Boers rode off, leaving the guns behind them. The Boers were dressed in British uniforms, and wore the tiger-skin, the badge of Damant's Horse, round their hats. Sir A. Conan Doyle says that in the last three months of 1901, as the block-house system developed, the small bands of Boers found it increasingly difficult to escape from the British columns, who were for ever at their heels. "Of the column commanders, Williams, Damant, Du Moulin, Lowry Cole and Wilson were the most successful. In their operations they were much aided by the South African Constabulary." For his services in this campaign Major Damant was created a C.B. in 1902, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]: "Frederick Hugh (first gazetted as J.H.) Damant, Major, Rimington's Guides. For excellent work in the command of a column in Orange River Colony." The Warrant and Insignia were sent out to South Africa, and presented to Lieut.-Colonel Damant by Brigadier-General E. O. F. Hamilton, at Heilbron, 12 March, 1902. Lieut.-Colonel Damant afterwards became Resident Magistrate for the District of Lydenberg, Transvaal.

SHEA, JOHN STUART MACKENZIE, Capt., was born 17 Jan. 1869, son of Colonel H. J. F. Shea, R.A. He was educated at Sedbergh and Sandhurst, and was gazetted to the Royal Irish Rifles 11 Feb. 1888, becoming Lieutenant, Royal Irish Rifles, 18 Feb. 1890, and Indian Staff Corps, 24 Nov. 1891. He served in the Chitral Campaign, 1895, with the Relief Force, receiving the Medal with clasp, and was promoted to Captain 11 Feb. 1899. He served in the South African War, 1900–2, being employed with Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry, and afterwards in command of the 5th and 6th Australian Contingents, from March, 1901, to March, 1902 Operations in Natal in June, 1900, including the action at Laing's Nek (6 to 9 June). Operations in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, July to 29 Nov. 1900. Operations in the Transvaal, March to 31 May, 1902. Operations in Orange River Colony, Dec. 1900, and March, 1901, to March, 1902. Operations in Cape Colony, Dec. 1900, to March, 1901. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. and 15 Nov. 1901]; was given the Brevet of Major 22 Aug. 1902; received the Queen's Medal with four clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps; was placed on the list of Officers considered qualified for Staff employment, in consequence of service on the Staff in the Field, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]: "John Stuart Mackenzie Shea, Capt., 15th Bengal Lancers, commanding South Australian Mounted Infantry. For gallant leading of a night attack on Smit's Laager, 1 Aug., against a superior force of the enemy." The Insignia and Warrant were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, and presented by Major-General Elliott in South Africa. He became Major 11 Feb. 1906, and was a Professor at the Staff College, India, 26 June, 1906, to 20 Jan. 1910; and was given the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 10 July, 1912, and promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel 11 Feb. 1914. Lieut.-Colonel Shea served throughout the European War, holding a special appointment from 5 Aug. 1914, to 28 Aug. 1914, as G.S.O.1, B.E.F.; as G.S.O.2, B.E.F., 29 Aug. 1914, to 28 Dec. 1914; as G.S.O.1, 6th Division, B.E.F., 29 Dec. 1914, to 3 July, 1915; as Brigade Commander, 151st Infantry Brigade, B.E.F., British Armies in France, 4 July, 1915, to 16 May, 1916. He was given the Brevet of Colonel 1 Jan. 1916; was Divisional Commander, 30th Division, British Armies in France, 17 May, 1916, to 31 March, 1917; became Major-General 1 Jan. 1917, and was appointed Divisional Commander, 60th Division, Egyptian Expeditionary Force, 2 Aug. 1917. He was mentioned in Despatches, created a C.B. (1915); given the Brevet of Colonel; created a C.M.G. (1918), and a K.C.M.G. (1919). Sir John Shea married, in 1902, Winifred Mary, daughter of the late William Congreve, of Burton and Congreve, and they have three daughters.

He was promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel 2 Oct. 1918. Lieut.-Colonel Sheppard married, in 1906, Nellie Marion, eldest daughter of Henry Adler, of Avondale, Dornfontein, Johannesburg.

London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901.—"War Office, 27 Sept. 1901. The King has been graciously pleased to give orders for the following appointments to the Distinguished Service Order to the undermentioned Officers, in recognition of services during the operations in South Africa. To bear date 29 Nov. 1900. To be Companions of the Distinguished Service Order."

PAGET, HAROLD, Brevet Colonel, was born 9 Sept. 1849, son of Leopold G. Paget (son of the Hon. Berkeley Paget) and Georgina, daughter of the Rev. J. F. Moore Halsey, of Gaddesden Park, Hertfordshire. He was educated at Wellington, and was gazetted to the 10th Foot as Ensign 23 Jan. 1869, becoming Cornet, 18th Hussars, on the same date, and Cornet, 7th Hussars, 27 Feb. 1869; Lieutenant 22 Feb. 1871. He was A.D.C. to the G.O.C., Eastern District, 1873–77; promoted to Captain 23 July, 1879; extra A.D.C. to the Viceroy of Ireland, 1879–81. Capt. Paget served in the Sudan, 1884–85, in the Nile Expedition, as Adjutant, Light Camel Regt., and was present at the affair at Abu Klea on 17 Feb. (slightly wounded). He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 25 Aug. 1885]; was given the Brevet of Major 15 June, 1885; received the Medal with clasp and the Bronze Star. He became Major 5 May, 1886, and in the same year passed the Staff College; was Brigade Major, Cavalry, Aldershot, 1888–91; Military Secretary to the Provincial Commander-in-Chief, Bombay, 1893; promoted to Lieut.-Colonel 26 Jan. 1895, commanding the 7th Hussars from 1895 to 1899. In 1896–97 he served in the Matabeleland Campaign; was mentioned in Despatches 9 March, 1897, and created a C.B., and on 26 June, 1899, was given the Brevet of Colonel. He served in South Africa in command of a battalion of Imperial Yeomanry (Paget's Horse) in 1900. Some of Paget's Horse were present at the action at Faber's Put, by which Sir C. Warren crushed the rebellion in Griqualand. When the Boers attacked Lichtenburg on 3 March, 1901, the defenders were 600 in number, consisting of Paget's Horse and three companies of the 1st Battn. Northumberland Fusiliers. The attack was made by Delarey, Smuts and Celliers, with 1,500 men. Sir A. Conan Doyle says, in "The Great Boer War" (page 440), that a garrison made up of "less sturdy material might have been overborne by the vigour of the attack. As it was, the garrison were driven to their last trench, but held out under very heavy fire all day, and next morning the Boers abandoned the attack. Their losses appear to have been over fifty in number, and included Commandant Celliers, who was badly wounded and afterwards taken prisoner at Warm Baths. The brave garrison lost fourteen killed, including two officers of the Northumberlands, and twenty wounded." Colonel Paget also performed the duties of Commandant at Ottoshoop. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901], and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Harold Paget, C.B., Lieut.-Colonel and Brevet Colonel, Commanding the 19th Battn. Imperial Yeomanry, in recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in India, and presented there 15 May, 1902. Colonel Paget retired 26 June, 1904.

FENWICK HENRY THOMAS, Brevet Lieut.-Colonel, was born 20 Dec. 1863, second son of the late Henry Fenwick and Jane Sutwidge, daughter of John Cookson, of Meldon Park, Northumberland. He joined the Royal Horse Guards 11 March, 1885, as Lieutenant, becoming Captain 15 April, 1891, and Major 19 Sept. 1896. He was given the Brevet of Lieut.-Colonel 7 Oct. 1899, and became Second-in-Command, and served in the South African War, 1899–1900, taking part in the Relief of Kimberley; operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900, including operations at Paardeberg (17 to 26 Feb.), actions at Poplar Grove, Dreifontein, Houtnek (Thoba Mountain), Vet River (5 and 6 May) and Zand River; operations in the Transvaal in May and June, 1900, including actions near Johannesburg, Pretoria and Diamond Hill (11 and 12 June); operations in the Transvaal, west of Pretoria, 1900, including action at Elands River (4 to 16 Aug.); operations in Orange River Colony, May to November, 1900, including actions at Bethlehem (6 and 7 July) and Wittebergen (1 to 29 July); operations in Cape Colony, south of Orange River, 1899–1900, including actions at Colesberg (5 Jan. to 2 Feb.). He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with six clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Henry Thomas Fenwick, M.V.O., Major and Brevet Lieut.-Colonel, Royal Horse Guards. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented to him by the King 29 Oct. 1901. He had been created an M.V.O. in 1901. He became Lieut.-Colonel 7 Oct. 1903, and Colonel 27 Oct. 1909, and commanded the Royal Horse Guards, retiring 14 Oct. 1911. Colonel Fenwick was created a C.M.G. in 1917. He was M.P. for Houghton-le-Spring, Durham, 1892–95.

GRATTAN, O'DONNEL COLLEY, Lieut.-Colonel, was born 13 June, 1855, at Crawley, Sussex, son of Henry Colley Grattan and Lucy Nugent Grattan. He was privately educated, and at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst. He was commissioned as Second Lieutenant in the King's Liverpool Regt. in 1876, becoming Lieutenant 10 March, 1877. Lieut. Grattan served in the Afghan War, 1878–80, with the Kurram Valley Force, under Sir F. Roberts (Field-Marshal Lord Roberts); was present at the action of 28 Nov. 1878, in the Kurram Valley, and battle and capture of Peiwar Kotal; affair at Ali Khel (Medal with clasp); was promoted Capt. 20 Sept. 1882; Major 26 Oct. 1892; Lieutenant-Colonel 17 Feb. 1900.
